GIRL BANDIT IN BROOKLINE HOLDUP

With a girl bandit snapping out commands, the manager and two clerks of Morgan Brothers creamery at Harvard and Coolidge streets, Brookline, were robbed of $193 today.

The hatless blonde directed the entire proceeding while her man companion waved a revolver and forced the three victims into an ice chest at the rear of the store.

Leo Landry of Brainerd road, Brighton, the manager and Harold Mattson and Melvin Jacquith, the clerks, told police that the couple entered just after the store opened for the day and a moment after the safe had been opened.

"This is a stickup and there's no foolin' about it," the comely blonde announced to Mattson and Jacquith.

"FREEZE 'EM UP"

"You, too," she snapped at Landry as he dashed from a rear room of the store.

"Freeze 'em up, big boy," she ordered her companion.

Apparently familiar with his pretty companion's jargon, the gunman ordered all three into the ice chest. The couple then took the $193 from the opened safe.

Through a recent invention, the three were able to unlock the ice chest from the inside but the bandit couple had made good their escape by the time they got out.

CAR NUMBER TAKEN

A pedestrian later reported to police that he saw a sedan race away from the store at the time the holdup took place. He furnished them with the number. They said it was issued to a man who had a criminal record.

The girl bandit was described to police as 5 feet 7 inches tall, wind-blown bobbed hair, 140 pounds, brown coat.

Her companion was 5 feet 7 inches tall, 180 pounds, dark complexion and wore a brown overcoat.

Landry said the couple answered descriptions of those who held up the same store last month.

Amelia May Have To Postpone Flight

Oakland, Cal., March 13 (UP)—Amelia Earhart cast anxious eyes at the cloudy skies today and considered postponing the start of her round-the-world flight.

After a final test of her $80,000 plane, Miss Earhart said she was "so terribly excited she was tired," and planned to rest over the week-end, if she did not hop off later in the day.

Paris Express Wrecked

Bourges, France, March 13 (AP)—Several persons were reported killed and a number injured in a wreck of the Paris-Mont Dore Express near the village of Corquoy, 20 miles from here.

Exile Hanfstaengl In Hitler Row

DR. ERNST HANFSTAENGL

BULLETIN

Berlin, March 13 (AP)—Friends of Ernst Franz Sedgwick Hanfstaengl, Jr., the Harvard-educated erstwhile intimate of Fuehrer Adolf Hitler, said today he had gone to Spain on a secret mission—and might not come back.

Berlin, March 13 (INS)—Dr. Ernest "Putzi" Hanfstaengl, Harvard graduate, one-time head of the Nazi press bureau and once a close confidante of Adolf Hitler, has crossed the frontier into "voluntary exile" and may take up residence in the United States, it was learned today.

Exact circumstances of Hanfstaengl's sudden departure remained secret, but it was understood that by agreement with Nazi authorities, he will not return to Germany.

The gay, piano-playing "Putzi" who was once virtual "court musician" to the Hitler regime, left the Reich on February 10, shorn of his official title of press chief following a stormy climax of undisclosed nature.

MAIL SENT TO LONDON

His present whereabouts remains a mystery, even his closest Berlin intimates being ignorant of his destination. It is understood, however, his personal mail and telegrams are being forwarded to some London address.

A once close friend said he believed Hanfstaengl had gone to

Dr. Thomson, G. E., Father of Electric Welding, Dies

Dr. Elihu Thomson, 83, of the General Electric Company, inventor of electric arc welding and contemporary of the late Thomas A. Edison, died today at his home in Swampscott. He had been seriously ill since January.

The famous inventor, who received his first patent on electric welding in 1886, would have been 84, March 29.

At his bedside when he died was his wife, the former Clarissa Hovey of Boston, and his three sons, Roland D. Thomson of Schenectady, Malcolm Thomson of Swampscott and Donald T. Thomson of Rye, N. Y.

Last fall engineers gathered in Detroit and Lynn to celebrate the 50th anniversary of Dr. Thomson's discovery of electric welding. At that time he exchanged greetings over a special wire with the two celebrations. It was his last public activity.

3 Armed Bandits Get Payroll From R. I. Bookkeeper

Warwick, R. I., March 13 (AP)—Three armed men held up the bookkeeper of the Hollen Brewing Company in Warwick avenue, in front of the Club Bagdad, shortly before noon today and escaped with a $1600 payroll.

Manasseno J. Giusti, the bookkeeper, telephoned police the men were in a Rhode Island registered car. They drove along side of him as he was driving to the brewery and forced him off the road.

After taking the payroll, the men leaped into their car and started toward Providence, he reported.

U. S.-Britain Set Visa Fees at $2

London, March 13 (AP)—Great Britain and the United States concluded an agreement today for the reduction of visa fees from ten dollars to two dollars.

Girl Walks to Death Before Fast Train

Houston, Tex., March 13 (AP)—Engineer C. R. Peters peered out of the cab of his speeding locomotive and saw a girl striding up the tracks into the path of his train.

He pulled the whistle cord and set the brakes. But the girl paid no heed. She held her head high a moment before the engine struck her, Peters said.

At an undertaker's Mrs. Magdalena Sanders identified the girl, pretty and brown-eyed, as her sister, Ann Kastner, a student nurse. She said the girl left a note yesterday, reading:

"Perhaps you will never see me again. I hope you will be repaid in some way for all the things you have done for me."

BRITISH SHIP IN RACE WITH FIRE AT SEA

San Francisco, March 13 (AP)—A 12-hour race against fire at sea started on the Pacific early today as the British motorship Silverlarch wirelessed for aid to remove passengers.

The message, picked up by radio stations on the coast and at Honolulu, was answered by the motorship Fijian, which said it was 12 hours from the Silverlarch and speeding to the rescue.

In calling for aid at 3:48 a. m. (Eastern Standard Time), Captain F. H. Henderson of the Silverlarch said a fire burning in No. 3 hold for several days was threatening to blaze out of control.

The Silverlarch is 300 miles northeast of the Hawaiian islands on her way from San Pedro, Cal., to the Orient.

The ship is a 400-foot vessel of 5122 tons.

She carries a crew of between 40 and 45 men, and on this trip, eight passengers, believed to be Americans on a world tour, were aboard.

James H. Connolly, Brookline, Dies

James H. Connolly, 45, of Davis avenue, Brookline, attendance officer of the Brookline public schools, world war veteran, died suddenly today at his home of a heart attack.

Connolly was a member of the Brookline police department, until his appointment in 1928 as attendance officer.

He is survived by his wife, two daughters, and several brothers and sisters.

Paul Fitzgerald Quits Court Berth

Paul Fitzgerald, son of Registrar of Deeds William T. A. Fitzgerald, senior clerk in the Suffolk Superior Court clerk's office, today tendered his resignation to Clerk of Courts John Patrick Connolly.

Fitzgerald lives at 42 Ivy street, Back Bay.

Registrar Fitzgerald asserted that his son resigned the clerk's post to enter private practice of law.

Lord Tweedsmuir To Visit President

Washington, March 13 (AP)—The coming White House visit of Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor-General of Canada, brought renewed speculation today on the possibility of a St. Lawrence waterway agreement.

Lord and Lady Tweedsmuir it was announced in Ottawa, will be overnight guests of the President and Mrs. Roosevelt on March 31.

Boston's Most Joyous Meeting in Many a Month

EVA TESSIER WEEPS FOR JOY AS SHE GREETS HER SON

An 11-hour train ride from Montreal—the longest 11 hours they ever spent—today brought Roy Tessier, 44-year-old blind war veteran, and his wife, Eva, home to Boston.

It brought them home to their 16-year-old son, Arthur, Brighton high school sophomore, whom they hadn't seen since last September when they were refused entry into this country after a 12-day visit to Montreal.

Tessier, who fought for this country in the World War, was refused re-admission because he wasn't a citizen and because of a technical ruling he might become a "public charge."

Yesterday at 2:30 p. m. they were informed by immigration officials they could come back to their "native land." They took the first train at 9 p. m.

SON, CROWD GREET THEM

Their train pulled into North Station at 8:03 with a large group of friends waiting for them. Included in the group were Congressman John P. Higgins, who was instrumental in introducing

War on Masonry

Berlin, March 13 (INS)—German agency reports from Bucharest today said the holy synod of the Rumanian Church has proclaimed a fight against Free Masonry on grounds it is the "enemy of God, social order and of nations."

Anybody Know This Victim of Amnesia?

Repeating she had been "looking for a job" when police found her wandering in Everett square in Everett last night, a woman about 25 years old remained still unidentified at Whidden Memorial Hospital today suffering from amnesia.

Neither papers in her purse or identification marks on her clothing were found.

In her pocketbook was 43 cents. She is five feet tall, 130 pounds, light complexion, and wore a brown dress, hat, shoes, gloves and coat.

She told police she had been riding on street cars. There was a bruise on her left leg, believed due to a fall.

Woman Dies, 2 Hurt in Crash

A woman was instantly killed and two persons were critically injured early today when a speeding automobile rammed into another car parked in Essex street, Swampscott.

Mrs. Stella Simoneau, 22, of 315 Jefferson street, Lynn, was killed as the car driven by her husband, Alfred, 26, collided with the parked automobile of Henry A. Gagnon, of 7 Palmer street, Salem.

Mrs. Simoneau was thrown to the street and died instantly of a fractured skull.

Riding in the same car, Althea Henderson, 26, of 30 Prescott street, Salem, suffered a fractured skull when her head struck the rear seat.

Simoneau also suffered a fractured skull and was removed to Lynn Hospital with Miss Henderson. Both were placed on the danger list.

RUSHES TASK OF SELECTING CANDIDATES

Police Commissioner Joseph F. Timilty will appoint 170 new patrolmen instead of 150 under his first plan, will make 18 patrolmen sergeants and promote three sergeants to the rank of lieutenant on April 1, the Boston Evening American learned today.

The appointment of the new men, it was learned, will be made possible through the vacancies created in promoting the 18 sergeants and three lieutenants.

Police Commissioner Timilty is now interviewing all entrance candidates and plans to work tomorrow afternoon and night to complete the task.

A physician, the choice of the police commissioner, will examine the candidates some time next week, it was also learned.

Police Commissioner Timilty previously announced that he would appoint 150 patrolmen on April 1 or 2 and his budget calling for at least that many appointments, has already been approved by the city council.

Aged N. H. Invalid Kills Self by Fire

Newport, N. H., March 13 (AP)—A 69-year-old invalid, Mrs. Fredericka Anderson, today committed suicide, Medical Referee Charles F. Keeley said, by burning herself.

Dr. Keeley said Mrs. Anderson's husband, Sam, discovered his wife in flames. Anderson dragged his wife to a porch and beat out the the flames but Dr. Keeley said she was already dead.

The Medical Referee said Mrs. Keeley, a cripple 20 years, had been dressed only a short time before by her husband and placed in a chair. She apparently dragged her chair to a cupboard containing matches, Dr. Keeley said.

Davis Will Head U. S. Sugar Mission

Washington, March 13 (INS)—A new mission abroad for Norman Davis, America's perennial roving ambassador, was disclosed today by the State Department.

Secretary of State Cordell Hull announced Davis has been named to head an American delegation to the International Sugar Conference in London, opening April 5.

U. S. Destroyer Launched

Kearny, N. J., March 13 (AP)—The new U. S. Somers, a 1850-ton destroyer, slid down the ways today at the Federal Ship Building & Drydock Co. plant here.

3 Children Span U. S. With Body of Mother

Hartford, Conn., March 13 (AP)—Percy W. Hallowell's four children—Frank, 12, is the eldest—were reunited with their father today.

They arrived in Hartford last night from San Diego, Cal., on the same train that brought the body of their mother, the former Miss Helen Schroeder, a "war bride" whom Hallowell met in Germany in 1920.

Mrs. Hallowell, who went to California last summer when she became ill, died suddenly Monday.

Twelve-year-old Frank then was faced with the task of caring for his three sisters, Flora, 10, Dorothy, 8, and Jacqueline, 4, on the long trans-continental trip home. The Travelers Aid Society helped and passengers were extremely kind, Frank said.

During the trip little Jacqueline did not know that her mother was dead. Frank warned everybody not to tell her.

MURPHY MOVES TO BAN SITS; G-M, UNION TO SIGN

STRIKES PERIL ALL DETROIT INDUSTRY

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

Detroit, March 13—Governor Frank Murphy today personally grappled with the problem of checking the mounting wave of sit-down strikes paralyzing the industrial life of America's fourth largest city.

He came from Lansing and prepared to open a conference of civic leaders, employers and representatives of labor with the object of meeting the crisis before it becomes even more serious.

He was expected to appoint a committee of 20 to co-operate with law-enforcement agencies in coping with the sit-down crisis.

Fully 100,000 workers are idle as a result of strikes at the eight plants of Chrysler Corporation, the Hudson Motor Car Company, and thirty other industries including the Crowley-Milner Department Store and Liggett's Drug Store in the downtown district.

GENERAL MOTORS PACT

The ability of General Motors Corporation and United Automobile Workers' Union officials to agree on final terms on wages, hours and working conditions did not detract from the seriousness of the "sit-down problem."

In the view of the Board of Commerce the situation is "intolerable" and "Detroit's international civic reputation is endangered." They appealed to the Governor for a "militant program."

The "peace agreement" between General Motors and the UAW has not yet been signed. It was to come up for ratification today by 200 union delegates, who came here from all parts of the country. If ratified, it will be signed promptly by union officials. General Motors representatives said they expected to sign tomorrow.

WOULD END SIT-DOWNS

Under the terms of the agreement an attempt will be made to abolish sit-down strikes. One of the sections of the pact reads:

"Should any differences arise over grievances there shall be no suspension or stoppage of work until every effort has been exhausted to adjust them through the regular grievance procedure and in no case without the approval of the international officers of the union."

Minimum wages, a subject prominent in the union's demands in settlement of the recent General Motors strike, are dealt with as follows:

"Due to the variety of business and conditions under which General Motors operates its various plants, it has been impossible to establish a uniform minimum wage rate in all General Motors plants.

"However, in plants where the minimum rates become a matter of dispute, the matter will be dealt with promptly and if not settled satisfactorily by the local management will be speedily dealt with according to the grievance procedure."

FOR HIGHER WAGES

The grievance procedure stipulates that the corporation recognizes the union shop under specified conditions.

Under "wages" the agreement says:

"General Motors operates a number of plants in many communities throughout the United States, producing a wide variety of products sold in highly competitive markets, some of which are seasonal. It employs thousands of skilled men of practically every trade in metal manufacturing and many others.

"Accordingly, the question of local wage rates is a matter which must be determined by the local plant management for each plant in the light of these facts.

"Any wage complaints which cannot be settled by the local plant management will be dealt with further according to the grievance procedure."

Steel Wage Contract Being Drawn by Union

Pittsburgh, March 13 (AP)—Representatives of the steel workers organizing committee met today with their chief, Philip Murray, to discuss a contract to be submitted Monday to "Big Steel," the Carnegie-Illinois Corporation.

The contract will settle details of the preliminary agreement signed two weeks ago, providing higher wages and fewer hours for the nation's steel workers.

Jones & Laughlin, Allegheny Steel and Spang Chalfant & Company, with more than 30,000 employes in the Pittsburgh district, announced pay hikes yesterday.

In addition to the $5 a day minimum and 40-hour week spokesmen for the steel workers said Spang Chalfant & Company had agreed to recognize the committee as bargaining agent for its members.

Sheriff Seeks Deputies To Oust Meat Sitters

Detroit, March 13 (INS)—Sheriff Wilcox today said he would ask Circuit court for permission to swear in 600 special deputies to eject sit-down strikers from the Newton packing plant.

The strikers, he said, were holding $170,000 worth of meat in defiance of an injunction granted by Judge Allan Campbell, ordering the strikers not to interfere with removal of the meat. Sit-downers, armed with meat hooks, barred deputy sheriffs.

CARDINAL HOME, ASKS RADIO CLEANUP

WILLIAM CARDINAL O'CONNELL
As He Returned From His Winter Home in Nassau

By JAMES F. McENANEY

Following a ten weeks' vacation at his winter home, The Hermitage, in Nassau, William Cardinal O'Connell, arrived back in Boston today.

His Eminence, accompanied by his secretary, Monsignor Jeremiah F. Minihan, was met at India Wharf by several priests and friends.

The Cardinal arrived in New York yesterday aboard the S. S. Carinthia and sailed last night for Boston on the Eastern Steamship Acadia.

BIG TASK FOR CLERGY

Declaring that he was in the best of health and having enjoyed a real good rest, Cardinal O'Connell went directly to his Lake street residence, where he immediately delved into diocesan matters that awaited his return.

Reluctant to be interviewed on national political matters such as the Supreme Court question, the Cardinal told this reporter that an important task lies before the clergy of the nation.

"In many quarters it has been reported that the youngsters of today, especially those between the ages of 18 and 20, are on the downward trend, morally speaking," said His Eminence.

"This is not correct. In our own parochial schools and Sunday schools we find that the children of today are no different in this respect than their fathers and mothers.

"They are just as spiritually minded, but the atmosphere surrounding them is quite different. I might say it is more feverish. We have a fight on our hands to keep the radio, movies and stage clean.

"It is up to the clergy to lead this fight."

MENTIONS STATE BILL

Referring to the bill now before the legislature regarding repeal of a bill allowing state fund to be used for the transportation of parochial school children to and from schools the Cardinal said:

"I am surprised that the supporters of this repeal bill are taking such an active interest in the expenditure of such a small amount of money as compared with the huge amounts that are being spent for other purposes, not as important as this."

Cardinal O'Connell declared that he would attend the Irish Charitable Society dinner St. Patrick's night to be held in Copley Plaza hotel.

"I am breaking away from my usual custom," he said, "but on such a glorious occasion I am proud to be able to attend.

"Although I am 77 years old, I think I can remain up a little beyond my usual bed time hour."

Girl Sitters Dine on Boss, Then Dance

Pittsburgh, March 13 (AP)—Two hundred and fifty girl sit strikers in a cigar factory sent out for lipstick, powder and rouge today while they danced to radio music, lounged in makeshift chairs or shouted from factory windows to boy friends.

They already had received supplies of food, sweets and cushions from relatives and sympathizers.

Just to show there were no ill feelings, the vice-president of the Standard Cigar Company, R. B. Russell, paid $50 for the sit-downers' dinner last night.

He said today was payday and checks would be distributed as usual.

IT'S ON THE AIR! "Jobs by the Minute" are broadcast each morning over Radio Station WORL between 7:45-8:00 A. M., one hour later on Sundays.

30-HOUR WEEK FOR TEXTILES, AIM OF BILL

Washington, March 13 (INS)—Imposition of a 30-hour week in the textile industry, which employs 1,000,000 workers, was proposed today by Representative Kent Keller (D.), Illinois, chairman of a House labor sub-committee in charge of framing a "a little NRA" for the industry.

While Secretary of Labor Perkins has approved the 35-hour week provision in the Ellenbogen textile bill, Keller announced that the sub-committee will consider slashing the work week limit. He said he will summon his sub-committee next week and begin revision of the present bill for presentation in the House.

"I shall propose that the hours of labor be reduced to 30, believing that this will take up a great deal of slack," said Keller.

HEARINGS PLANNED

Enactment of separate legislation for the textile industry, similar to that for the soft coal industry embraced in the Vinson-Guffey Bill, has been approved by both the Bureau of the Budget, which passes on legislation for the President, and the Labor Department.

Keller said that Merl Vincent, former administrator of the textile division of NRA, and Gregory Hankin, former NRA lawyer, will meet with the sub-committee to work over the present bill.

"We plan also to have hearings so that both industry and labor may be heard on the bill, but we expect to have it ready for passage in the present session," he added.

COURT-PROOF BILL

"The bill in its present form is the result of the legal work of Mr. Hankin. We are going to draft a bill which will, if possible, stand the test in the Supreme Court. We believe that we can do it. We certainly are going to put the measure up to the court."

Under the revised Ellenbogen bill, a national textile commission is created and is given authority to fix minimum wages and maximum hours. Keller said he would couple with his 30-hour week proposal a provision giving the commission authority to make exceptions to meet emergency conditions.

Representative Ellenbogen (D.), Pennsylvania, planned to urge prompt action.

"We are going to get legislation," he said. "The textile industry should be handled separately from general wages and hours legislation."

'HANFY' EXILED BY NAZI CHIEFS

Moscow, but this was thought improbable.

Hanfstaengl's banishment apparently has been brewing for two years, during which time he has tried repeatedly but without success to see Hitler and plead his case. He had incurred disfavor because he produced motion pictures which were banned because of their political texture.

Hanfstaengl was ousted from his high office when Joachim Von Ribbentrop, ambassador to London and special emissary of the foreign office, first rose to power.

For the time being, Hanfstaengl's staff continues to function but his offices are expected to be dissolved completely.

It was understood here Hanfstaengl has influential friends in the United States who are attempting to arrange his return there.

Harvard Slight Caused Bitter Tilt With Hanfy

Ernst Franz Sedgwick Hanfstaengl, who for many years has been one of Adolf Hitler's most intimate friends, was graduated from Harvard in 1909 in the same class with John Reed, world renowned Communist.

He rowed in the freshman and varsity crews and was a member of many of the best clubs, including Hasty Pudding, Dicky, Ibsen, Signet, and Sphinx.

Since his graduation from Harvard he has become one of the most colorful figures in German political circles.

Some of his enemies were fond of calling "Hanfy" the court jester of the Hitler regime. Many men of prominence including Anthony Comstock and Lord Beaverbrook, the English newspaper magnate made the mistake of underestimating Hanfstaengl's ability.

During the past three years "Hanfy" has been in the limelight several times because of the refusal of President James B. Conant of Harvard University to accept offers of scholarships by the German official for a student wishing to study in Germany.

This offer was rejected twice by President Conant and the rejections brought bitter criticism from Hitler's publicity chief.

Despite the rejections of money for scholarships "the President and Fellows" of Harvard sent an invitation to Hanfstaengl to attend the 300th anniversary celebration of the university last September, but the German leader did not come over for the occasion.

CROWDS STORM COURT IN CHRYSLER FIGHT

Detroit, March 13 (INS) — A spectacular labor demonstration by thousands of workers was staged in and near the county building today as the Chrysler Corporation pressed its petition to Circuit Judge Allan Campbell for an injunction for eviction of sit-down strikers from eight Chrysler plants.

Union forces stormed the building. As court opened nearly 5000 persons—most of them men wearing the yellow and black lapel button of the United Automobile Workers Union—were in the building.

Judge Campbell's courtroom was packed to capacity. Unionists jammed against both walls and stood in the aisles. Helpless building guards deputized minor union leaders to keep order.

Some of the union men carried American flags. Others wore a type of overseas cap adopted by the union.

Outside the building hundreds of union men paraded in the streets. There was a band, picket line placards and sporadic cheering.

Hammond to Wed Katherine Cheney

Santa Barbara, Calif., March 13 (AP)—The engagement of Miss Katherine Cheney to George Fiske Hammond of Santa Barbara has been announced by Miss Cheney's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Seth Leslie Cheney of Manchester, Conn., winter visitors here.

The bride-elect is the granddaughter of the late Col. and Mrs. Frank W. Cheney of Manchester. Hammond is the son of Mrs. Gardiner Hammond of Santa Barbara and Boston and the late Gardiner Greene Hammond.

Pushes Wife To Safety; Loses Life

Berkeley, Cal., March 13 (US)—Sobbing hysterically, Mrs. Sarah Krowel related how her husband, Rudolph, 42, sacrificed his own life to save hers.

When their automobile caught on the Southern Pacific Electric train tracks here, Mrs. Krowel suddenly noticed a fast-approaching mail train, and shouted to her husband to jump.

"No, you jump first," he said, opening the door and pushing her to safety.

Krowel was crushed to death in the crash. Mrs. Krowel escaped with scratches.

Baby Found In Suit Case

This bit of humanity gurgles in City Hospital tooday without anyone to claim it. But police have clue which, they say, will lead them to the parents of the two weeks old boy who was abandoned in a Back Bay apartment house.

A wee baby boy two weeks old was thriving at City Hospital today while police were seeking the person or persons who abandoned him in a suitcase in the corridor of an apartment building on Park drive, Back Bay.

Apprehension of those responsible for his abandonment was expected to be made today, because of an easily identified clue on a pillow case placed in the bag.

The baby was discovered by two boys, Francis Morris and William Aranow, both of 137 Peterborough street, Back Bay, who saw the suitcase in the corridor and investigated.

The top of the case was opened about three inches so that air could reach the infant. The boys put tentative hands inside and felt something warm.

They opened the lid. The baby was sleeping so peacefully they at first thought it was a doll, until its eyes opened and its mouth moved.

Racing to the corner they notified Patrolman Mensworth of the Back Bay station, who had the baby transferred to City Hospital in a police ambulance.

The infant was found to be in perfect health, and not very hungry. He was dressed only in a woolen singlet.

In the suitcase police found the pillow case, yellow-white, with a name written in ink in the hem. The name is apparently a laundry mark, but so uncommon that police said they expected to have no trouble in tracing it to its owner.

4 POWERS OPEN BLOCKADE ON SPAIN

London, March 13 (AP) — The warships of four great powers—Great Britain, France, Italy and Germany—today began taking over "beats" to police the coasts of war-scarred Spain and put teeth in the 27-national neutrality agreement.

Further vital steps, supplementing the naval cordon, remained to be taken, however, before the "hands off Spain" lines could be drawn tightly about the Civil War.

Three newly appointed supervisors of the international blockade, chosen as the neutrality committee ended months of bickering over details and principles, planned to meet in London Monday to complete plans.

They must provide for recruiting of frontier agents to be stationed on the French and Portuguese borders of Spain, a task committee members believed would require at least a week.

Each of the 27 participating nations also must pass legislation or promulgate decrees requiring its ships to comply with orders of the International Naval Patrol. Then, the committee hoped, the flow of munitions and volunteers to Spain would be halted.

Planes Drop 492 Bombs On Positions of Rebels

Madrid, March 13 (AP)—Government troops, supported by planes which dropped 492 bombs on insurgent positions, drove enemy concentrations from strategic Trijueque, 12 miles north of Guadalajara, the Madrid defense Junta reported today.

One complete artillery battery was seized in the government counter-attack, commanders asserted.

France Nationalizes Large Arms Factory

Paris, March 13 (AP) — The French Government today nationalized the Schneider arms factory at Creusot, the largest plant in France and one of the most important in Europe.

Expropriation of all land, buildings, workshops, material stocks and machinery used in the manufacture of war supplies was announced in a decree in the official journal. The date when the government will take possession was not set.

70 Men Sail Secretly From U. S. to Aid Spain

New York, March 13 (INS)—Defying United States neutrality laws, 70 young men were secretly en route aboard the Ile de France today to join the Loyalist forces in Spain.

Although facing loss of American citizenship if detected, they planned to run the international blockade to reach their destination.

6 Loyalist Airplanes Shot Down Near Madrid

Lisbon, Portugal, March 13 (INS)—Four Loyalist planes were shot down on the Guadalajara front and two more were shot down near Madrid, Rebel General Queipo De Llado stated today in a broadcast from Seville.

Employment Ads published in the Boston American-Sunday Advertiser are broadcast each morning over Radio Station WORL with the correct time between 7:45-8:00 A. M., one hour later on Sundays, at no additional charge to the advertiser.

Colette Lyons Races Home as Mother Dies

COLETTE LYONS

Colette Lyons, motion picture actress, was racing homeward today from British Columbia to attend the funeral of her mother, Mrs. Bridget Lyons of Merrymount.

Aboard a high-powered plane, Miss Lyons expects to arrive early tonight. She has been on location in British Columbia.

Her mother died yesterday while visiting friends in Boston.

Funeral services will be held Monday morning at the Church of St. John the Baptist, Quincy, where a high mass of requiem will be celebrated at 9 a. m. Another daughter, Mrs. Helen Stone, of Dorchester, also survives.

Duce Lauds Eaton, U. S. Hero in 1804, Of Derna Capture

Derna, Libya, March 13 (AP)—Premier Benito Mussolini, inspecting his vast North African colonial domain, strode through throngs of cheering Moslems today acclaimed as the "protector of our race and our religion."

"God, through you, is restoring peace and prosperity to mankind," the Moslem magistrate of Derna told Il Duce in welcoming him on his first visit in a decade to Libya.

Here on the edge of the Sirte desert, Il Duce paid silent tribute to the memory of Lieutenant William Eaton, doughty Vermont school teacher who led in the capture of Derna for the United States 133 years ago.

In 1804, Lieutenant Eaton marshalled 10 Americans, 38 Greeks and 400 Arabs to capture Derna while three Yankee brigs shelled the city, a decisive factor in persuading the Bashaw of Tripoli to make peace in his conflict with the United States.

United States merchantmen thus were insured safely from raids by the piratical Bashaw and his Libyan cohorts.

Mother of Two In Fagin Charge

Worcester, March 13—A 38-year-old mother who allegedly taught her two small daughters to shoplift today was summoned to appear in district court Monday on charges of larceny.

According to police, Mrs. Blanche Olson, 38, of Hammond street, admitted thefts in four stores when she was apprehended. With her were her two children, eight and 11 years of age. According to police, the youngsters slipped articles into a bag their mother was carrying.

H. A. Mayer Files Bankruptcy Plea

Harold A. Mayer of Waltham, a financial adviser and president of Mayer & Company, Boston, today filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy in federal court listing liabilities of $372,917, and assets of $100.

Among 93 unsecured creditors listed in the petition by Mayer were Dr. Harold W. Dana of Beacon street, Boston, note for $56,561; Miss Florence H. Potter of Beacon street, Brookline, note for $38,616, and Miss Pyor Fullam of Waltham, one for $17,369.

Battle Colds With Artificial Sun

ADULTS, CHILDREN ENJOY SANITARIUM 'BEACH'

Nurse Lillian Edwards puts the goggles on Gerald Ledeau, Jr., 11 months old, of Stoneham, who is getting his first taste of the nice warm "beach" sun, in the winter time, and indoors, in the New England Sanatorium and Hospital actinic-ray room.

Rays to Play Part In Fight Against Future Illnesses

Children wriggled in delight today under the rays of an artificial sun at the New England Sanatorium and Hospital where two score youngsters and adults are given daily treatments to bulwark them against colds.

Under the latest type of sun lamp, according to Dr. J. R. Kennedy, one minute is equal to an hour under the summer sun.

Besides fortifying these lucky tots against the sniffles of colds, the rays immunize them to rickets, too.

Every day they lie on their backs, then on their "tummies" under the actinic rays, wearing goggles to protect their eyes, as strength pours into their bodies.

The entire room is filled with the rays and reflected beams of the lamps, making it as beneficial as the beach in summer.

Student nurses take instruction in methods of handling the rays which, doctors say, will play an increasing part in preventing illnesses in the future.

Here is little George Donderion, Jr., 3, of 1663 Commonwealth avenue, stretched out under the artificial "sun" at the New England Sanatorium and Hospital, Stoneham, with goggles protecting his eyes, as his body drinks in cold-resisting rays.

ORCHIDS, My Lady, TO YOU

FLOWER SHOW EXHIBIT RICH

With 3600 orchids valued at $10,000 as one of the chief features, the annual flower show of Massachusetts Horticultural Society continued to attract record crowds today at Mechanics Building.

Among the thousands of orchids of every hue displayed by L. Sherman Adams of Wellesley is a new seedling known as Cym Lord Aberconway, which is blooming for the first time this year. It is white with carmen tipped lip and attracted unusual attention of flower lovers. The seedling is six years old.

Flowers Guarded

Another of similar color but much larger in size is Miltonia Lycaena. This is one of the 400 plants in the Adams exhibit that was given much attention by those who visited the hall.

Because of the value of these flowers several detectives were on watch to guard them from possible destruction or theft.

The main hall of the building represents a Dutch village. A canal flows the entire length of the hall and is covered by two bridges over which visitors may walk. The canal banks of growing grass are lined with tulip beds while on the sides of the hall are hundreds of hyacinths of every shade, ingeniously imbedded in mould.

Display of Roses

The lover of roses will be thrilled by the display in Paul Revere hall.

During the first three hours 15,000 persons passed into the building to get an eyeful of beauty, all records being shattered.

A silver cup for the most outstanding amateur exhibit offered by the Royal Horticultural Society of Great Britain was awarded to Gardner Museum of Back Bay for its aisle of Chinese jasmine and silk oaks.

Lord Aberconway of England, one of the judges, will present the cup this evening at a banquet of the Massachusetts society.

A gold medal offered by the Pennsylvania Horticultural Society for the exhibit showing highest standard of culture was awarded to Adams for his marvelous orchid exhibition.

The Cape Ann Garden Club won the New York Horticultural Society's gold medal for the most beautiful exhibit in the show.

Mayor Due Back

Mayor Mansfield was expected back at City Hall today after being forced to cancel an engagement at the Kiwanis Club in Worcester because of a cold.

President "Marching Through Georgia"

International News Photograph Service

With his daughter-in-law, Mrs. James Roosevelt, the former Betsy Cushing of Boston, at his side, President Roosevelt was driven from his train to "The Other White House" in Warm Springs, Ga. There he and his party will spend a fortnight.

Crash Ends Chase Of Three Youths, One Dying

Three youths who were fleeing in an allegedly stolen car through Boston crashed into another machine today. One of the riders was so badly injured his name was placed on the danger list at Newton hospital.

The dying youth is John T. Nolan, 20, of Tremont street, Roxbury.

One of his companions, James Riley, 20, of Fifth street, South Boston, is under arrest charged with larceny of the car. He is also charged with breaking and entering a gasoline station at 1974 Washington street, Newton Lower Falls, and larceny of a wall telephone which police say they found in the car.

The third youth ran and escaped.

The car in which the trio were fleeing a police cruising car, collided at Washington and Chestnut streets, West Newton, with an automobile operated by Francis J. [illegible] of Auburndale avenue, West Newton.

Patrolmen George Tobin and Cornelius J. Dwyer had chased the youths for three miles.

President Has Swim, Drives to His Farm

Warm Springs, Ga., March 13 (INS).—In slacks, flannel shirt and battered hat, President Roosevelt basked in the warm sunshine of early Georgia spring today.

Swirls of dust billowed up behind the 1931-model touring car—boasting 10,000 miles on its speedometer—which the President himself drove over the red clay roads.

Mr. Roosevelt slept late this morning in his pine mountain cottage.

As he emerged from "the Little White House" he hastened to the $30,000 glass-enclosed pool which Edsel Ford donated to the Foundation for Infantile Paralysis victims that the President inspired. Water runs into this pool from the natural mineral springs at a temperature of 85 to 90 degrees.

An adept swimmer, the President enjoyed an hour of sport, playing water tag and tossing around a large rubber ball with some of the youngsters and older patients. William C. Bullitt, American ambassador to France, accompanied the President to the pool. Betsy Roosevelt, the President's daughter-in-law, was an excited participant in the water games.

Following lunch, the President drove over for a detailed inspection of his 2000-acre farm nearby.

Carrier Pigeons Fly Hospital News

Tulsa, Okla., March 13 (AP).—Swift carrier pigeons are winging frequent hospital reports on the condition of Mrs. Glenn H. Young to her family in Sapulpa, 15 miles away. Her husband, an attorney, put the winged messengers to work when Mrs. Young came here for an operation.

"A check shows the pigeons carry my messages home in 20 minutes," Young said.

French Loan Sold, Blum Rule Safe

Paris, March 13 (AP).—France has turned the elusive financial and political "corner," Premier Leon Blum's supporters proclaimed today as a result of the quick sale of the first installment of bonds for a 10,500,000,000-franc (about $470,830,000) defense loan.

Blum called a council of ministers to hear a report by Finance Minister Vincent Auriol today—just one week after adoption of conservative policies and decision to issue the bonds.

Auriol said the first installment of the loan was surpassed in less than eight hours.

Townsend Dollars Returned to Banks

Greenfield, March 13—Eight of the 200 one-dollar bills Mrs. Carrie E. [illegible] was given to conduct her experiment of the Townsend plan have turned up at local banks, it was announced by Townsend headquarters today.

Two of the bills landed in the Franklin County Trust Company and six wound up in the First National Bank. Five of the bills were numbered 42, 45, 47, 149 and 150, indicating the first few dollars are being held. They each bore three checks, showing the number of transactions.

8 Cents an Hour Pay Raise Rejected

Pittsburgh, March 13—An eight cents an hour wage increase, bringing common labor from 50 to 58 cents, has been rejected here by the joint committee of employe representatives and members of the United Electrical and Radio Workers.

The union is seeking to negotiate a wage agreement with Westinghouse Electric and Manufacturing Company on behalf of 10,000 employes.

Flood Aid Lauded By Red Cross Head

In thanking the people of Greater Boston for their quick and generous aid for flood sufferers in the mid-West, Chairman Joseph B. Hamlen of Boston Metropolitan Chapter, American Red Cross, revealed the extent of the contributions.

Hamlen said that more than 30,000 articles of clothing and 37,456 cans of food were received and shipped from Boston to the flood victims.

In the statement issued by Hamlen he said that the Red Cross appeal, issued through the newspapers and over the radio, had hardly gone forth before donations were received in such large numbers that it was necessary to maintain a big warehouse near Red Cross headquarters to handle the merchandise.

He also said that as the Boston chapter had made special arrangements with railroads for free transportation and immediate delivery, numerous New England chapters included their contributions. This made it possible to send carload after carload of food and clothing to the stricken flood sufferers.

2 Boston Officers Hurt by Cars

Two Boston officers were seriously injured early today when they were knocked to the street by two automobiles in separate accidents.

Patrolman Everett L. Hutchinson, 24, attached to the Warren avenue station, was struck while questioning a suspect on Tremont street in the South End.

Driver of the car, [illegible], of Dunbarton street, Boston, failed to stop and was halted by a civilian driver near the scene who gave chase. He was charged with drunken driving and driving to endanger. Police are also investigating his failure to carry insurance and his carrying of Maine license plates.

Hutchinson suffered a fractured spine and his name was placed on the danger list at City Hospital.

Patrolman Samuel Higgins, 45, of the Back Bay station, received a concussion of the brain when he was struck by a car operated by Wilbur C. Rice, of Schenectady, N. Y., while on [illegible].

Well, Maybe The Egg Is Questionable

Holbrook, March 13—Alfred Ford, local restaurateur, today viewed with misgivings a question-mark shaped egg laid by one of his usually dependable hens, who never let a day pass without furnishing a marketable product.

The unusually shaped egg is about two and a half inches long and a half inch wide.

Ford is wondering if the egg is a warning that his hens are planning a sit-down strike.

BROCKTON FIRE ROUTS 50

Brockton, March 13—Five persons, one a five-year-old girl, were carried to safety and more than 50 persons were driven to the street here early today when fire swept a 21-apartment block at 227 North Main street.

Firemen were hampered by the dense clouds of smoke which accompanied the blaze, origin of which is under investigation.

Climbing up to the third floor on ladders, firemen carried down Mr. and Mrs. Aremus Chase and Mr. and Mrs. Edward Shydeck.

Fire Chief F. F. Dickinson, learning from a distracted mother her 5-year-old daughter was still on the third floor, personally climbed up and brought Marilyn McGuinness to safety. The blaze was brought under control after two hours. Damage was estimated at $25,000.

Teacher, Sick, Frets About Distant Class

A 21-year-old school teacher all the way from Baddeck, Cape Breton, N. S., fretted in the Massachusetts General Hospital today because she was upset about 20 little tots, aged 5 to 8, who might get themselves into trouble while she was here getting a lung fixed up.

The teacher, Miss Betty Lemoine, arrived via sledge, mountain road, automobile ride and train. She was forced to leave the isolated summer resort when she experienced difficulty breathing.

The little school house will be closed while Miss Lemoine is here but she is worried, nevertheless. She's afraid little Johnny won't study his short division and that Jane might forget all about the spelling lesson.

Physicians said Miss Lemoine might have inhaled a foreign substance while swimming last summer.

Baby Hurled Down Shaft; Father Held

A North End baby girl started life today by being hurled eight feet down an air shaft in Cooper street.

The infant, born earlier today, was taken to City Hospital, where physicians stated she was apparently uninjured and her condition was reported "fair."

Police later arrested a youth, alleged to be the father.

The 17-year-old mother told police a young man living in the house hurled the baby through the shaft window. She was taken to Haymarket Relief Hospital, where her condition was also reported as "fair."

Her father was awakened by the cries of the infant and he discovered the baby on the metal floor of the shaft. He summoned police.

Jackson College Dance on Tonight

Miss Mary Mergandahl, popular freshman at Jackson, department for women at Tufts College, has been selected to represent her class on the committee of the annual interclass dance tonight in the Cousens gymnasium.

Miss Audrey L. Moran represents the seniors and is chairman. Miss Lois M. O'Brien has been selected from the juniors and Miss Marion L. Donoghue the sophomores.

Mystery Blaze Sweeps Arms Plant

Leicester, Eng., March 13 (AP).—A mysterious fire swept the Davenset Engineering works today, causing heavy damage and forcing suspension of work on admiralty defense plan orders.

Origin of the fire was not known, but authorities began an intensive investigation in view of recent reports of numerous cases of suspected sabotage.

Seek Gypsy Queen In $3500 Robbery

A search was on throughout the entire East today for Rose Bimbo, "Queen of the Gypsies," and her husband, wanted for the brutal beating and robbery of $3500 from Mrs. Linda Vassa Cheng, 58, of Reading, wife of a Chinese doctor, in a tea room on Stuart street, yesterday.

Mrs. Cheng had gone to the tea room to have her fortune told

Flowers That Bloom in the Spring, Tra La

There are so many beautiful and valuable flowers on display at the annual flower show of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society at Mechanics Building that it's a difficult task to select the handsomest exhibit. But this one isn't so bad—not with a harmonizing girl like Anita Langendaen in the background.

Miss Langendaen, who hails from Jamaica Plain, is admiring—as who wouldn't—the hyacinth bed. Detectives are on guard at the show to protect some of the exhibits. That's how valuable they are.

Walsh Calls Court Plan Menace to Democracy

Senator Stands Before "Mike"

SENATOR DAVID I. WALSH
Assails Roosevelt Reform Move

New York, March 13 (INS)—The roster of United States Senators definitely opposed to President Roosevelt's Supreme Court reorganization program stood at 37 today after Senator David I. Walsh (D.), Mass., assailed the plan as a "sabotage of rights."

Walsh and two other senators, in speeches broadcast nationally from a mass meeting that packed Carnegie Hall, hit the court proposal as a menace to American democracy. The other senatorial speakers were Senator Royal S. Copeland of New York and Senator Edward R. Burke, Nebraska, both Democrats. All attacked the plan as dangerous and unnecessary.

It was the first time Senator Walsh had stated his position on the issue.

Senator Walsh said in part:

"The question we are discussing tonight involves the integrity of the Constitution and the independence of the judicial branch of the government and especially of the United States Supreme Court.

3-Branch Principle

"If there is one fundamental principle more than any other underlying our constitution it is that one providing for the separation of the three branches of the government, each with separate and distinct powers.

"This definite separation of the three branches of government did not find its way into the Constitution by accident. The founders knew what they wanted and the Constitution they adopted expressed their philosophy of government, and their moral concept of the inalienable rights of mankind.

"They were mindful of the tyrany and oppression experienced by the peoples of the world under monarchial, parliamentary and other forms of government. They were determined that, above all else, tyranny and dictatorship should not exist in the free government they instituted.

"My fellow-citizens, the Supreme Court of the United States is not infallible. It is a human institution. Congress is not infallible. A president or a governor is not infallible.

"The founders of the republic sought by every known human means to make the Supreme Court (quoting from the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts) "As fair, impartial and independent as the lot of humanity would admit."

State of Fear

"What is the character and nature of the proposal which has aroused this fear and brought to this platform tonight members of the United States Senate from four different sections of the nation, not as Democrats, but as Americans?

"It is to change the personnel of the Supreme Court by giving a President authority to appoint members whose views are satisfactory to him, through an increase in its membership or by forcing justices over 70 years years of age to retire. This is objectionable on many grounds.

"If approved, it is calculated to destroy the Supreme Court as the separate and independent judicial branch of the government in which the final judicial power was vested by the Constitution.

"If approved, it will prevent the states from protecting the rights preserved to them in the Constitution, for is not the intent of the present proposal to reorganize the Supreme Court, to the end that the court may not raise constitutional objections to transfer of powers from the state to the federal government?

"If approved, the liberties of the individual citizen and his inalienable rights and remedies—guaranteed to him by the Constitution—are at the mercy of Congress and the executive, for of what avail are constitutional guarantees if the courts are subservient to a President and agreeable to upholding acts of Congress he sanctions?

"The bill now before the Congress does not require any President to enlarge the membership of the Supreme Court to 15, but it gives to our President today and to his successors, an elastic power, a discretionary authority, to appoint additional judges, or not, according to his own desires, whenever judges are past 70 years of age and remain on the bench.

Power Control

"In brief, it is proposed to give to the executive power to control future decisions of the court not only by the immediate appointment of additional judges who agree with his political philosophies, but to leave him with the power hereafter to enlarge or maintain the then membership of the court according to the exigencies of the moment.

"Never in its long history has the Supreme Court decreed that the people did not have the right to make whatever laws they chose, by constitutional methods.

"What are the arguments advanced in favor of this astonishing proposal? It is contended that the Supreme Court should not be permitted to thwart the will of the people as expressed by their representatives in Congress and their President; that the control of the government should not be confined to nine men or a majority of them to hold within their power the well-being of the country as a whole. The fallacy of this contention is that the Supreme Court is not a legislative body. The Supreme Court does not make laws. It exercises a purely negative function.

"They further contend that to change the constitution by formal amendment, so as to enlarge the powers and authority of the central government, would be slow and cumbersome. Nor, they add, is it certain that the requisite approval of the states could be obtained. Therefore, it is argued, we may arrive at the same destination with facility and with speed, by the simple expedient of changing the membership of the Supreme Court.

Sabotage of Rights

"If this, my fellow Americans, is not government by expediency by men rather than by law, what is it? I submit there can be no justification for such ruthless sabotage of the people's rights—such a thinly disguised attempt to suspend the constitution.

"It is charged that those who are opposed to the reorganization of the Supreme Court are animated by fear, and, it is asked, "Fear of what?" I say it is the same fear that prompted our forefathers to insist, as a condition of ratification that the bill of righs be written into the constitution.

"It was fear of the loss of their expressly reserved rights that dictated the inclusion in the constitution of these words: "The enumeration in the constitution of certain rights shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people," and again "The powers not delegated to the United States by the constitution, nor prohibited by it to the states, are reserved to the states respectively, or to the people." It was fear that led them to provide that no executive could levy taxes and the levying of taxes, they stipulated, should be the sole function of the Congress and further that the initiation of taxes should be reserved solely to the lower House of the Congress.

"Yes, the constitution is full of fears—is full of prohibition against autocratic power—it is full of checks and balances.

"Fear of what? Fear of a tyrannical majority in Congress. Fear of an arbitrary executive. Fear of coerced judges.

"Without an independent judiciary, I hesitate to even think of denials to minorities of constitutional guarantee if some of the doctrines preached by groups in this country today which, through an hysteric wave should be suddenly enacted into law.

"My fellow-citizens, in the face of so much present argument and debate, of political and personal feeling, let us not lose sight of the fundamental question—the question of the integrity of our courts.

Fight Pledge

"It will be a tragic day, my fellow countrymen, if that day ever comes, when the Supreme Court is subservient to the chief executive, to the Congress or to any other individual, class or group, whether official or unofficial. Whatever their imperfections, the Supreme Court of the United States has been for 150 years our political refuge and strength. It has been the last citadel for the protection of our priceless liberties."

Senator Copeland asserted the Supreme Court scheme would "put in jeopardy the personal, religious and property rights of every man, woman and child in America."

Senator Burke declared:

"Every thinking man and woman in America today should realize that at this moment we do have our rendezvous with destiny. It is no exaggeration to say that constitutional democracy in America has a rendezvous with death."

Previously he had quoted from President Roosevelt's acceptance speech last June:

"This generation of Americans has a rendezvous with destiny."

Burke added:

"Democracy is face to face with death—death to all semblance of sovereignty in the States—death to the separation of governmental power into three departments, each master in its own house."

He declared the proposal strikes a blow at:

1—States' rights.

2—Division of power in the government.

3—Limitations on governmental powers.

President's Book Terms Court Plan 'Unsound'

Washington, March 13—Spectators were stirred during the Senate hearing on President Roosevelt's court plan when Senator Burton K. Wheeler (D.) of Montana charged that the President in his book "Forward Looking," written in 1933, has branded as "unsound" proposals to enlarge the Supreme Court.

Quoting from the President's book, Wheeler read the President's assertion that to add justices to the court "simply adds to the ravages of the disease."

Senator Wheeler read part of the President's book discussing congested court dockets and suggestions for relieving them.

In the book, Wheeler quoted President Roosevelt as saying:

"In the face of this congestion (of the courts) the remedy commonly proposed is to add new judges or new courts, but it will readily be seen that if the problem is what I have stated it to be such a so-called remedy merely aggravates the complaint.

"There are of course legitimate demands for additional judicial man power in sections where the population has grown rapidly.

"But it is easy to see that to apply this remedy in all cases is to add to the ravages of the disease, to contribute to the confusion and, what is profoundly important at this time, to burden still further an already embarrassed taxpayer."

The Montanan then said:

"Because some of us agree with what he said in 1933 we are now thought to be defeatist lawyers.

"I say when you add six justices to the Supreme Court there is no assurance that conditions we complain of will be corrected."

AGREEMENT ON AMENDMENT IS AIM OF FOES

By WILLIAM K. HUTCHINSON
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Washington, March 13—Foes of President Roosevelt's plan to give the Supreme Court a "blood infusion" today were seeking agreement of a constitutional amendment granting Congress ample power to legislate on economic and social problems.

The opposition smarted under the President's twice-uttered charge that they were condemning his plan and urging a constitutional amendment without being able to agree among themselves on the language of such an amendment. With scores of proposed amendments pending in Congress, there was no immediate prospect of success in the opposition drive for agreement on the issue.

The administration, meanwhile, rested its case, temporarily, before the Senate judiciary committee and awaited presentation by the opposition next week. Attorney-General Cummings, his assistant, Robert H. Jackson, and John P. Devaney, former chief justice of the Minnesota supreme court, have pleaded the President's case at hearings.

WHEELER TO TESTIFY

This trio declared the Supreme Court had "usurped" legislative powers from Congress, defied the will of the people and blocked social and economic reforms. They called the President's plan constitutional, reasonable and effective. All three frowned on constitutional amendments as "too slow," doubtful of success, and resulting only in leaving future legislation to be invalidated by the same Supreme Court.

The opposition will take the witness stand next week, with Senator Wheeler (D), Montana, its leader, as the first witness. Wheeler already has denounced the plan as dangerous to free government, a step toward dictatorship, and "Fascist" in character.

An array of liberals, farm leaders and churchmen will follow Wheeler. Included will be Rev. Dr. John Haynes Holmes, New York liberal cleric; Raymond T. Moley, former No. 1 man in the "brain trust;" Representative William Lemke, North Dakota, third party candidate for president last November, and Louis J. Taber, head of the National Grange.

WANT TWO-THIRDS RULE

Liberal leaders are inclined against amendments limiting the powers of the Supreme Court, although a few—like Senator Norris (I.), Nebraska—would vote to limit its powers to declare legislation unconstitutional except by a two-thirds majority of its membership. Several proposed amendments would limit such decisions to a 7 to 2 vote.

The liberals would prefer to give Congress specific new constitutional powers. Such pending amendments, however, touch many different subjects. One group would affect wages and conditions of labor. Another would touch marketing of agricultural commodities. Several would change the "due process" clauses of the fifth and fourteenth amendments.

There has been no hint yet that the opposition can agree on any amendment.

One of the latest proposed amendments, sponsored by Senator Andrews (D.), Florida, who is friendly to the President's plan, would increase the court's membership to 11 justices, one from each judicial circuit; call for two-third majorities to invalidate legislation, and provide voluntary retirement at 70 and compulsory retirement at 75.

FRAMINGHAM FIRE PERILS 6

Battling an incendiary blaze that caused $50,000 damage and which for a time threatened the Framingham business district, 60 firemen were held at bay for nearly four hours by a roaring inferno that destroyed a four-story warehouse on Waverly street, Framingham, early today.

The building, used for furniture storage by the A. Simon and Company, was completely destroyed. Six firemen had a narrow escape when the roof and one wall collapsed as they stood a few feet away pouring water into the flames at the rate of 3000 gallons per minute.

Dozens of families in the immediate vicinity left their homes on orders from Chief LeRoy Trevett, of the Framingham fire department. Emergency calls were sent out to the Natick and Ashland fire companies who responded in record time.

Police revealed that the fire was the third in the past week in the same area, all of which were put down as the work of a firebug.

15 1-2 Oz. Baby Dies In N. Y. Incubator

New York, March 13 (AP)—A mite of life prematurely born Thursday to Mr. and Mrs. Max Post failed to overcome overwhelming odds, and died at 5:30 a. m. today in an incubator at a fashionable midtown hospital.

Weighing only 15½ ounces and so tiny she could be held in the palm of the hand, the girl was fed milk with a medicine dropper while four doctors worked to save her life.

About two and a half months premature, the baby was named Dorothy by her parents, shortly before she expired. Post is a Works Progress Administration worker.

Ex-King's Pension

Bitter Row Over Cash For Edward

By DAVID P. SENTNER
International News Service Staff Correspondent

London, March 13—Secret session of the Parliamentary select committee dealing with financial support of Britain's monarchy will be marked next week by heated debate over a move to keep the Duke of Windsor on a virtual pension from the royal family.

This move is to be made instead of granting him a public annuity from the civil list, according to belief in Parliamentry quarters today.

David Lloyd George, war-time prime minister and Winston Churchill, who will be members of the committee when it is formed Wednesday, have taken command of the forces urging that the duke's past services to the nation should be recognized publicly in the form of a state pension.

THEY SHAME PARLIAMENT

Both are expected to wage their battle within the select committee and angry words are exxpected to develop between the and the laborite representatives, who are flatly opposed to any state pension.

It is understood both Churchill and Lloyd George will insist it is the height of ingratitude to make no provision for Edward and will assert Parliament ought to be ashamed of such "shabby treatment."

Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, however, is expected to point out it is not a question of ingratitude but of political expediency, since a state pension would necessitate inclusion of Edward's name on the civil list.

This would permit debate in Parliament and might reopen the whole case of the abdication, which the government considers would be an extremely unwise course at present in view of the approaching coronation of George VI.

PRAISES EX-KING

Composition of the committee insures it will be "packed" in favor of a decision permitting King George to make private provision for his brother, thus not permitting Parliament to bring the Duke of Windsor's name into the debate when the civil list is discussed.

Lloyd George, in an interview with the London News-Chronicle, said:

"It is scandalous if the former king is left out. All members of the royal family have been provided for except the ex-king, who, it is generally admitted, behaved very decently.

"He abdicated in order to make no difficulty for the reigning King—and to make no provision for him—well, it is the height of meanness. There is a touch of vindictiveness about it.

"I am loyal to the throne, whoever occupies it, but that has nothing to do with treatment of a man who has been King and who abdicated rather than make any trouble for his successor or for the government."

Wally Denies Plan To Live in U. S.

Baltimore, March 13 (US)—Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson has no present intention of coming to the United States to live, she said in a letter to Mrs. Lionel Atwill, of Baltimore, it become known here.

Mrs. Atwill is owner of Rainbow Hill, at Eccleston, in the Green Spring Valley. The Baltimore News-Post publishes a statement by telephone from Mrs. Atwill from her apartment at the Ritz, New York City, in which she said:

"I saw Mrs. Simpson when I was in London prior to the King's abdication. She and I are friends. After she went to France following the abdication, there began rumors that she and the Duke of Windsor might come to the United States to live—possibly in Maryland.

"So I wrote and offered her my house in the Green Spring Valley. I had a letter from her saying that she has no intention of ever coming to the United States to live."

Edward Sends Wally Letter by Mountbatten

Enzesfeld, Austria, March 13 (INS)—Lord Louis Mountbatten, guest for several days of the Duke of Windsor at the Rothschild chateau here, left for Paris by airplane today carrying an important letter from the Duke to Mrs. Wallis Warfield Simpson.

The Duke is supposed to leave Enzesfeld next week for some unknown destination. Whether he plans to meet Mrs. Simpson for Easter could not be learned.

9 More Bodies Sought in Mine

Logan, W. Va., March 13 (AP)—Rescue workers dug wearily today into tons of slate blocking the way to nine bodies in the blast-torn Macbeth mine.

Nine of the 18 who lost their lives in the terrific explosion at the Hutchinson Coal Company shaft were above ground—lying in funeral establishments or at their homes.

Man Attacked by 5 In Dover Street

Joseph Metuvitch, 45, of Shawmut avenue, South End, was beaten unconscious at Dover street and Shawmut avenue today.

Metuvitch was walking along Dover street. Five men accosted him and asked for a cigarette. He ignored them. One man knocked off Metuvitch's hat. Another dubbed him. He was taken to City Hospital.

BLIND VETERAN, WIFE RETURN

a bill into Congress permitting their re-entry, and officials of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, of which Tessier is a member.

But outstanding in the "delegation" was their son, Arthur.

No sooner had the train stopped and his parents come down the steps than the youth, unable to control his tears of joy, embraced his mother and father.

All three were speechless. Friends standing nearby brushed tears away at this happy reunion.

Still weeping, Mrs. Tessier told a Boston Evening American reporter:

"It was a terrible ordeal for my husband and me. It was the thought of my son in this country alone and the fact that I might never be allowed to return to this country I love that nearly drove me crazy with grief.

THANKFUL TO FRIENDS

"Arthur's letters to me every day were the only thing that kept my heart from breaking. Congressman Higgins has been wonderful and I can't thank the Veteran of Foreign Wars, Charles Warmuth (owner of a Devonshire street restaurant who has assured Mrs. Tessier she can have her old position back), and all my friends here in the United States enough for all they have done.

"It only took me five minutes to pack our grips yesterday afternoon when word came we could re-enter the country.

"My husband was so glad he nearly cried. When the train pulled out of Montreal at 9 o'clock every time a tie clicked I knew we were nearer Boston.

"When the porter this morning shouted 'North Station in 20 minutes,' my heart nearly stopped beating. It surely will be wonderful to get back to our apartment in Allston. I won't know what to do first.

TO GET PAPERS NOW

"It's been so terrible—so long to be away. Lord, to think we went away for two weeks and were forced to stay nearly seven months!

"You can bet that my husband will get his citizenship papers right away. We don't want this to happen again.

"Most of our money is gone, but that doesn't mean anything now that we're home. I've seen my boy again. You can always make more money, but you can't buy the love of a wonderful son. I'm going back to work just as soon as everything is settled.

"I'm too excited to say anything more right now. I can hardly believe we're back. But seeing you (the reporter whom she had known) makes me know it's Boston."

The Tessiers then were driven to the State House where, in the office of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the blind veteran signed his application for citizenship papers. Under an immigration ruling, which expires June 24, a World War veteran, who is not a citizen, may file for citizenship through his war post.

Merchants Protest N. H. Sales Tax

Concord, N. H., March 13—New Hampshire merchants and consumers banded together today for an invasion of the Legislature next Tuesday to protest a proposed sales tax.

Predicting the "greatest march upon the Legislature in history," more than 1000 merchants voiced their disapproval of the tax, which they claim would drive customers to borderline stores and money out of the state.

Joseph M. Lucier, secretary of the New Hampshire Council of Retail Merchants, and one of the spokesmen for the protestants, declared that merchants from all over the state would close shop Tuesday to join the march on the State House.

May Board Zepp While in Flight

Berlin, March 13 (INS)—British passengers flying to the United States aboard the German Derigible Hindenburg may in future be flown to the airship from a British airport by plane and taken aboard while the Hindenburg is in flight, officials disclosed today. They said successful experiments in this direction have been completed.

AS I SEE IT

By DAMON RUNYON

(Copyright, 1937, by King Features Syndicate, Inc., International and all other rights reserved.)

It seems that your good old Uncle Samuel is now an out-and-out rum seller.

Damon Runyon

For several years he has been brewing up great pots of rum in the Virgin Islands, and this rum is about to be put on the market under the title of Government House rum, through the agency of a New York firm.

The first shipment of 50,000 cases is due to arrive in New York in April. It will retail at $1.95 per fifth of a gallon, a price that seems reasonable enough. It places rum within the reach of rich and poor alike.

The rum was distilled by the Virgin Islands Company, which is described as "a Virgin Islands government corporation," and we find as chairman of the board, none other than the volatile Mr. Harold Ickes, Secretary of the Interior.

However, you must not infer that Mr. Ickes is going to put on an apron, and personally deal the rum across the mahogany. He merely represents your Uncle Samuel in the cooking of the rum. We do not know that Mr. Ickes will even drink any of the rum.

Rum is something you are supposed to use with a little discretion.

You cannot drink rum with the same informality that you would lager beer. Your Uncle Samuel's rum agent is good enough to print on the bottle label directions how to handle Government House rum, indicating the advisability of small quantities.

Mixes Suggested

The agent suggests dilution of the rum with seltzer, and vermouth, and sugar and citrus juices, and other ingredients that eventually harmonize into such things as "Rum Collins," and "Rum Manhattan," and "Planter's Punch."

Properly arranged, a rum drink can be made so that you scarcely notice the rum.

Straight rum is only for persons who have mattresses on their chests. The way to learn to drink straight rum is to practice on tobasco sauce. Three fingers of straight rum will break your legs, unless you are accustomed to it.

We do not care whether it is your Uncle Samuel's rum, or somebody else's. The record in the old days for drinking straight rum, as we remember, was six drinks, and a reach. This record may have been improved since then, but we doubt it.

We regret to note that in his list of recipes for making rum partially harmless, your Uncle Samuel has overlooked an old formula that once prevailed out West. We recall that we were taught it in San Francisco in infancy.

You take a seidel of straight rum, and add to it what we used to call gum, or syrup. Stir the gum up in the rum, and lift the potion to your lips with your right hand, holding firmly to your hat with your left. Drink quickly, then take a chaser of pure milk.

Old-time bartenders are apt to recognize the recipe. They always reached for the telephone when a customer inhaled one of these drams, and made ready to call the emergency hospital.

We are not recommending the drink, understand. All we say is that two or three of them will make you go right down to the chief of police's office and kick on his door.

We have an idea that your Uncle Samuel's formal entry into the rum business is going to raise quite a beef in some quarters.

His competitors are likely to object. If we were in the rum business, we would probably object, too. We would be afraid that if your Uncle Samuel found trade a little lax, he might recall a business trick of the lads back in the prohibition era, and start sending J. Edgar Hoover, or the U. S. Marines, around among the dealers, saying:

"You boys put in my line of rum, and push it, or else."

Your Uncle Samuel was somewhat informally and unofficially in the liquor business in that era, as you may remember, though he did not specialize in rum. He was a sort of silent partner. He took his income taxes off the booties who were honest enough to make returns on their traffic.

It is said there were quite a number of those. When your Uncle Samuel caught up with a bootie who was trying to do him out of his bit, he put the booties right in the hoosgow. The booties learned that it paid to be fair and square with your Uncle Samuel.

Given Bad Name

Rum has always had a worse name than it deserved, compared to some whiskey. For years there was a prejudice against it among those who did not know about rum-and-gum-with-milk-for-a-chaser.

Folks used to call it the demon rum. This gave rise to the impression that it was the devil's own brew. Perhaps this impression still exists among some persons. They will be greatly surprised when they learn that it really is Mr. Ickes' own brew.

The old-time prohibitionists generalized all liquor under the name of rum. They made it sound a most sinister word. As a youth, we were pretty firmly convinced that all human evil came from rum. As a matter of fact, most of it did, at that.

From the word rum, we get the terms rummy, rumpot, rumdum, rumhead, and other elegant expressions all meaning a drunkard, though the chances are the average drunkard never touches rum, except in a slightly varied form as a cure for dandruff.

Yet we find Byron, the poet, putting in a nice little boost for rum, when he sings:

"There's nought, no doubt,
so much the spirit calms as rum and true religion."

Barboy, give us a little of that Government House.

LEGION HUNTS BABY, VANISHED IN N. H.

By ARTHUR J. QUINN

Newport, N. H., March 13—A state-wide call to all members of the American Legion to come to East Unity and participate in one of the biggest woodland hunts for a missing child ever staged in New Hampshire was sounded today by State Commander Earl Mellon of Nashua.

The Legionnaires of the state will join groups of public-spirited citizens of Newport, Claremont, Lebanon, Hanover and other smaller towns within a radius of 25 miles in the hunt for little Shirley Brooks, 3, who has been missing since a week ago today.

Commander Mellon made his appeal following a lengthy conference with Attorney Ernest L. Bell of Keene.

"I am still not satisfied the child didn't wander into the woods to meet her father, became lost and then perished in the zero cold weather" said Caswell.

In a second breath, however, he said "there are many suspicious circumstances involved in the child's sudden disappearance which, of course, we are probing very carefully.

"If the child isn't in the woods, it has either been kidnaped for revenge or for a later demand for ransom money.

"The only other theory that can be entertained is the child was murdered by a fiend or for revenge against either one of the parents."

The authorities admit the father of the child has told them he had made many enemies while he was in charge of the transient camp, in Keene a year ago.

State Detective Caswell left here last night for Concord, carrying with him a quantity of ashes drawn from the fire box of the evaporator of the maple sugar house on the Brooks' maple grove.

Police Denied Information In Dorchester School Blast

Smile Through Their Hurts

REPORT SENT STATE FIRE MARSHAL

GERTRUDE WEINER ANNE MORSE HELEN SHAPIRO

Injured among the eight girl students in the chemical experiment blast at the Dorchester high school were Gertrude Weiner (left), of 37 West Selden street; Anne Morse, center, of 77 Whitfield street and Helen Shapiro of 42 Harwood street. Heroic action of the teacher, Miss Katherine M. Murphy, saved other pupils from injuries.

Repeated denials to police that an explosion took place in Dorchester High School for Girls yesterday afternoon were brought before the state marshal's office today by Captain Thomas Mulrey of the Fields Corner station.

Eight students and a teacher were burned when nitrates being used in a chemistry experiment exploded.

Captain Mulrey said he sent a policeman to the school at 3:30 following a call from a newspaper. The officer was told, the captain stated, that "nothing happened, nothing unusual took place." At five o'clock police were given a similar answer.

According to City Hospital, where Miss Katherine M. Murphy, the teacher, was brought, the explosion occurred at 12:30. She was admitted into the hospital at [illegible].

PROBE BY CAPT. MULREY

Besides bringing the matter before state fire officials, Captain Mulrey said he would conduct an investigation himself.

Of the nine victims showered with flaming liquid, Miss Murphy was the most seriously burned. She is being held at City Hospital while the others are undergoing treatment at home.

The explosion shook the entire school building and created a panic among the injured students and [illegible] others in the class room.

Heroic action by Miss Murphy saved the other students from being burned by the blaze. Though suffering great pain, she quickly pulled down a protecting screen in front of the alcove housing the experiment.

Miss Murphy was burned on the face, head, hands, arms and body.

OTHERS INJURED

The burned pupils, [illegible], are:

HELEN SHAPIRO, 16, of 42 Harwood street, severe burns on face.

ANNE MORSE, 16, of 77 Whitfield street, burns on left arm, nose cut and bruised.

FRANCES BUCKLEY, 16, of 18 Wheatland avenue, severe burns on head and face.

GERTRUDE WEINER, 37 West Selden street; ELEANOR O'HARA, 18 Vera street; HELEN SHEA, 61 Emerson street; EDITH BURESNACK, 71 Astoria street; FRANCES GORHAM, [illegible] street, all minor injuries.

It was reported the materials being used in the experiment were of the "nitrate group" prepared to result in the manufacture of gun powder, but it was not known what reaction of chemicals was responsible for the explosion.

"I had gone through the experiment once," Miss Murphy told reporters, "but some of the class asked me to repeat it. The students crowded around to get a close view."

Western Electric Boosts Pay 10 P. C.

Chicago, March 13 (INS)—Twelve thousand employes of the Western Electric Company's Hawthorne works today were advised of a 10 per cent wage increase, effective next Monday. The increase will amount to $1,500,000 a year.

BANK BANDITS HUNTED IN 3 N. E. STATES

State police in Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine guarded every road leading north today to trap four bandits reported speeding toward Canada after an $18,500 holdup of the Northern Westchester Bank in Katonah, N. Y.

The four, believed to be driving a stolen car with Massachusetts registration plates, are heavily armed, police notified authorities all along New England highways.

Their daring robbery, yesterday, came just 24 hours after Merle Vandenbush, notorious public enemy, had pleaded guilty to a holdup of the same bank two weeks ago.

But unlike Vandenbush, who fell into the hands of rural police ten miles south of Katonah, the new desperadoes headed northward toward Canada.

ABANDONED CAR FOUND

A half mile away from Katonah, speeding at a 70-mile-an-hour clip in a stolen car, they sideswiped a car going south, crashed through a fence and overturned.

Scooping up the money that spilled in the crash the bandits took the other car and headed northward toward Massachusetts again. Police lost their trail but found the car abandoned in Bridgeport, Conn., a few hours later.

There it was reported four men had leaped into a car bearing Massachusetts registration and driven north.

TELETYPE FLASH

Teletype messages flashed to New England police and patrols were hastily placed on all roads. Local police in Southern Massachusetts detailed extra officers at strategic points and Worcester police posted main streets with motorcycle patrolmen.

At the Farmingham barracks state police kept all men on duty and kept motorcycles in readiness should the bandits be spotted on the Worcester-Boston turnpike.

Boston police patrolled the Dedham line and the Brighton line in cruising cars but it was not thought likely the fugitives would seek their way north by this route.

Girl Bandit's Cold Victims

HAROLD MATTSON LEO LANDRY MELVIN JACQUITH

"Freeze 'em up" was the order of a blonde girl bandit at the Morgan Brothers creamery, at Harvard and Coolidge streets, Brookline. It meant that her "big boy" accomplice put the manager and two clerks in the ice box. Left to right, at the ice box door, are Harold Mattson, Leo Landry, store manager, and Melvin Jacquith, as they were released. The haul amounted to $193.

BABY SLAYING 'CONFESSOR' IS FOUND SANE

Windsor, Vt., March 13—The five-year-old boy who confessed participation in the child slaying of little Beverly Ann Page of Claremont is mentally sound.

This was the announcement of Attorney Louis Perkins, his counsel, following a secret three-day mental examination given the child by one of Vermont's outstanding psychiatrists.

Reports that neighbors living in the vicinity of the child's home, especially those with small girls, were leaving the district were branded as false today.

The nine-year-old child named by the younger boy as the actual killer in a new interview with his attorney, Raymond Trainer, reiterated his innocence today.

Attorneys for both the boys announced they would demand the right to appear and oppose the issuance of a complaint charging delinquency should County Solicitor Alban S. Parker make a move to obtain such a charge.

On Sunday afternoon Mrs. Mabel Paige, mother of the murdered child, will leave the Claremont Hospital with her new and as yet unnamed baby girl.

Quiz Two Brothers In Gallery Murder

Chicago, March 13 (INS)—Two brothers were questioned today in the mysterious shooting gallery murder of Julius Rohde a month ago.

The pair, Edwin Kalinowski, 28, and Roman, 26, were pointed out by a 12-year-old Charles Walker as the two he saw in Rohde's shooting gallery just before the murder.

ADVICE on LOVE and MARRIAGE -:- By Beatrice Fairfax

Fiance Asks Her to Wait For Him and Then Goes Out With Other Girl

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

We've been going together for three years. He's 20 and I'm 24. He claims to be in love with me, nevertheless he escorts a certain young lady to social functions and does not attempt to hide this from me.

The thing which is perplexing is he tells me I am to "wait" for him until we are able to be married. Do you think this boy is sincere?

VERA T.

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

I print the above letter because it is typical of hundreds I receive each week.

To think that he can have all the liberty in the world and to expect the girl who loves him to live the life of the cloister seems to be a rather general habit of young men today.

As far as Vera is concerned, I do not think that she had better "wait" to the extent of refusing to go out with other young men. She certainly has the same privilege to enjoy happiness as he does in going with others.

Of course, the fact that the young man does not attempt to conceal his escorting other girls is to his credit. If he told Vera to wait for him and then secretly sneaked off with the other young lady he would be less deserving of consideration.

Youth passes quickly and all girls, Vera included, make a serious mistake to throw away their best years of these always uncertain boys.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

The wolf seemed to have come in at the door, at the time our baby was born.

My husband had a small part-time job. We hadn't anything saved, and our little son was born in a charity hospital.

My health wasn't very good after the baby's birth, and it took all my strength to care for him.

My husband had an idea that if he went to a distant state, where he had some friends, he would make out better. He hated to part with us, and he was crazy about the baby.

Since he has gone I have had only one letter from him and no money.

I took a position without wages of any sort, to take care of some children whose mother was employed, but my own baby is sick, and I'm worried to death about him.

I nearly go crazy with the racket and quarreling of these other children and the poor health of my little one, who seems to be fading away before my eyes.

I'm not getting anywhere living with this family without wages, and I have completely lost touch with my husband. My letters to him have been returned from the postoffice. Altogether, I feel pretty

DESPERATE.

DEAR READER:

Take your baby to the best children's hospital in your city, and leave him there to be treated.

In the meantime, try all the social agencies and see if they cannot get you employment which will insure a living wage. When other agencies fail, your pastor often has some solution. The Bureau of Missing Persons might be able to find your husband.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

My one-time fiancee is very pretty and ten years younger than I am. I called one night when I wasn't expected and she came to the door in a distinctly flimsy negligee of which I disapproved.

When I went into the parlor I discovered she had company. She seemed actually proud that I was so shocked.

As I learned she was in the habit of receiving other friends in this costume I broke my engagement to the young lady.

Since then she has made outrageous charges, which are untrue, against me.

The difficulty is that these charges seem to have queered me with another girl I've been paying attention to since my engagement has been broken.

FRANK.

DEAR FRANK:

As you see, I've not given your entire letter, which contains a good deal of contradictory evidence.

Go to a good lawyer, and if you can't afford that, go to the Legal Aid Society and tell them just what you've told me.

I think under the circumstances that any suit entered by the young lady of the flimsy negligee wouldn't stand in a court of justice.

BEATRICE FAIRFAX.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I always read your column and enjoy it, but I must say I was thoroughly disgusted with a correspondent who signed himself "No No." It seems this man took a girl out with him and, quite unsolicited, she threw her arms around his neck and kissed him.

I don't believe the girl had any personal interest in the "simp," because his letter proved conclusively that he belonged to that fraternity.

I think that either she did it for a wager or from genuine curiosity, to see what a man of his type would do next.

He didn't do anything, proving to me what a simp he was.

MR. YES YES.

Whether the young lady threw her arms around Mr. No No for a wager, or just to see what he'd do next, is beyond my clairvoyant powers to decide. Which have it, the yes yeses, or the no nos? The motion has not yet been carried.

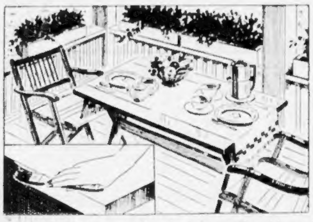
Dress Up Your Porch



PORCH time soon! Let's dress up the old porch furniture in new paint to make it fresh and sparkling as spring itself.

We can borrow a gay color scheme from the garden—daffodil yellow, vibrant tulip red, soft refreshing leaf green.

The table top also shows heat rings and stains from bygone lunches and dinners. So clean off the old finish down to the bare wood with a chemical paint remover. When dry, apply a prepared oil finish and rub, rub, rub. Repeat at weekly intervals for a beautiful heat-and-stain-resistant table top.

Now give chairs and lower part of table a bath of weak suds, a clear rinse and a good rubdown. Let dry 48 hours, sandpaper rough spots, dust off, start painting. A red table edge supplies bright contrast with yellow legs and a bit of red trim. Paint chairs yellow with water-proof fabric cushions in green.

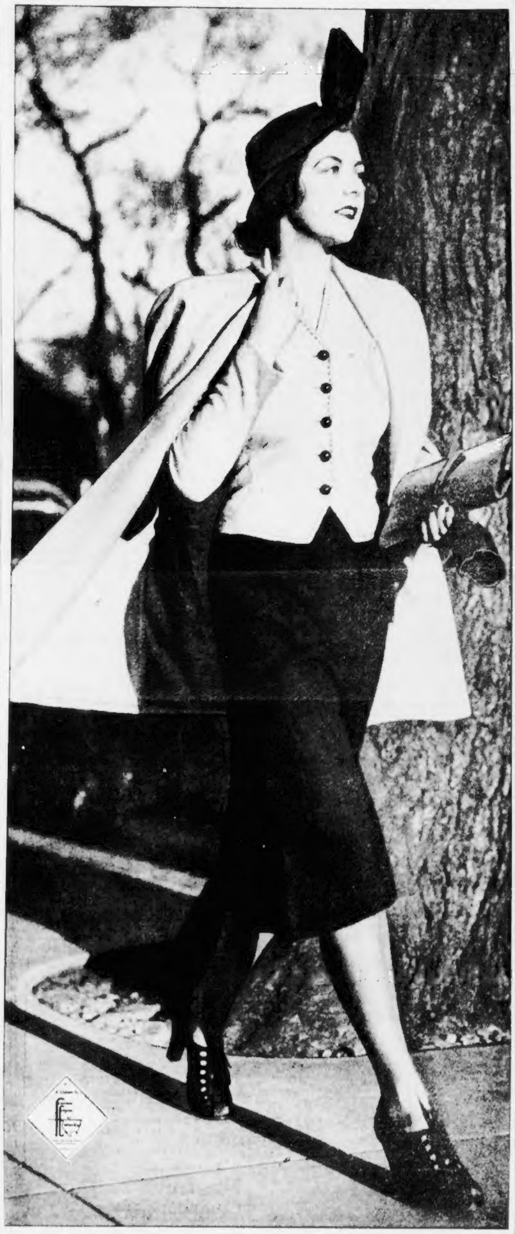
If you've a glider give it a green body with red trim and red awning-stripe cushions. And don't forget yellow flower boxes for the porch rail.

Use under coat of flat paint and one finishing coat of enamel for furniture that's been painted before. If you have a terrace or open porch, use high-grade house paint for both coats. Then, rain or shine, your furniture will come "smilin' through."

Our 40-page booklet HOW TO PAINT AND REFINISH FURNITURE, shows clever tricks for doing over old pieces. Fresh color schemes, professional finishes.

Send 15c for our booklet, HOW TO PAINT AND REFINISH FURNITURE, to Boston Evening American, Home Institute, 109 West 19th Street, New York, N. Y. Write plainly your NAME, ADDRESS and the NAME of booklet.

Gold and Black Cape Suit



NOTHING quite expresses the joyousness of spring . . . batches of downy chicks and bunnies and snowdrops excepted, but naturally . . . than a cape suit! You can see its verve and chic, just as it might look in the most famous Easter promenade of all . . . along the Commonwealth avenue mall . . . with Miss Leslie Blake modeling. There are "Marche Militaire" capes, there are English coachman capes, there are classic traveling capes, but the cape with the Gallic air tops them all. And that's just what this cape has! The fact that Schiaparelli designed its original in Paris might have something to do with it. And she used her favorite tweed accent, saddle stitching to outline details of the tight little under jacket. Cape and jacket are of pale gold tweed. Note the extension of shoulders and the subdued flare in the cape. That gives you height and more height! And don't miss the V neckline without a smidgin of scarf in sight. Black saddle stitching matches the black skirt. If you wish for shopping information on this Fashion Congress selection, phone Annice Brink, Fashion Editor, Liberty 4000, or write her at the Boston Evening American.

Don't Neglact a 'Quinsy Sore Throat'

By ROYAL S. COPELAND, M. D.

THIS is the time of the year when "quinsy sore throat" is likely to be prevalent.

If you have ever had quinsy you will readily agree with the statement that it is indeed a painful disorder.

As I have indicated, an infection of the tonsil is the real trouble. This infection is caused by germs which form pus. The pus is confined within the tonsil tissue, resulting in the formation of an abscess.

At first the sufferer has a slight chill and this is followed by fever and headache. Within a short time discomfort and pain are felt on the infected side of the throat. This pain persists for several days, gradually increasing in severity.

Soon the victim has difficulty in opening the mouth and in making movements of the jaw. The fever persists and there is an unpleasant odor from the mouth. Nausea, heartburn and other digestive disturbances are symptoms likely to appear.

Like any other abscess, its cure is made possible by incision, with drainage of the accumulated pus. Since most persons dread the knife, they often unnecessarily delay this procedure.

It is dangerous to neglect this condition because as long as pus is present there is an accumulation of poisons within the system.

Baked Tuna IN Avocado SHELLS

By MARTHA LEE

DO you serve tuna fish often? If you don't, you certainly don't realize what you are missing. It can be prepared in an endless number of ways.

We were interested to find out recently that tuna fish was unknown to American tables as short a time ago as twenty-five years. Aren't we fortunate to be living now in a "tuna conscious" age!

A tuna fish is a very large, gamey fish found along the Atlantic and Pacific coasts of North America. Most of ours comes from California, put up scientifically in cans all ready for use.

We've found so many good recipes for the use of this delicious fish that we want you to have as many as we have space for.

TUNA BAKED IN AVOCADO SHELLS

2 tablespoons butter
2 tablespoons flour
1 cup milk
1 minced pimento
1 7-ounce chicken of the sea tuna
2 medium avocados
½ cup bread crumbs
2 tablespoons butter (for crumbs)

Melt two tablespoons of butter to which add flour and mix well. After adding milk cook until thick while stirring constantly. Season to taste and add pimento and flaked tuna.

Fill the halved unpeeled avocado with creamed tuna. Add crumbs, salt and pepper to two tablespoons butter, melted. After spreading over the creamed mixture bake in oven at 425 deg. F. until a golden brown. If properly handled the avocados will not be cooked, but heated through.

TUNA CROQUETTES

Flake contents of one seven-ounce can chicken of the sea tuna, moisten with a very thick cream sauce, using three tablespoons butter and four tablespoons flour to one cup of milk. Season highly with salt, pepper and a little Worcestershire sauce. Add minced pimento and chopped parsley to taste and form into croquettes. Roll in crumbs, egg, then crumbs again, and fry in deep, hot fat. At serving time heap the middle of a large hot platter with buttered peas and finely diced carrots, place croquettes around edge, garnish with parsley.

Increasing a Defender's Burden

By JOSEPHINE CULBERTSON

A defender's lot is often just as happy as the declarer makes it.

Against certain naive declarers, defense becomes a simple pleasure; against others, one is made to feel that he is back at college wrestling with calculus.

In today's hand a contract was fulfilled only because the declarer presented a baffling problem to the defenders.

West opened the King of hearts, and declarer counted his losers which were a heart, at least one diamond, and almost surely two spades.

But there was another ground for hope, and that was through misleading the defenders. On this theory declarer won the first lead, and promptly returned the ten of hearts.

West, in with the Jack, realized that he was in a "tough spot." Declarer might have made the identical play with the Ace and two hearts, hoping for a third-round ruff in the dummy. If that were the situation, it would be imperative to take out dummy's trumps.

West remembered declarer's jump rebid in spades and considered it likely that his own Ace was the only spade trick declarer was missing, therefore laid down the Ace and continued with a second round.

Declarer's difficulties were now over. He drew the adverse trumps, and established dummy's diamonds, losing only one diamond, one heart and one spade.

"Your Figure, Madame!"

Fashions Bid You Exercise For Your Waistline

By IDA JEAN KAIN

(Copyright, 1937, King Features Syndicate, Inc.)

HOW do you look with a bright sash about your waist? In the newest and loveliest spring clothes, the emphasis is on the waistline—and it has to be slim.

At a recent fashion show, we couldn't help but notice that the stylists have gone completely figure minded and are unanimous in calling attention to the waistline.

There wasn't a dress without a brightly hued belt or sash of another color—and you know what that does to an ample waistline! Even the suits follow the waistward trend, with boleros, vestees and fitted jackets.

The figure you cut in your new clothes depends upon your measurements and your posture. The waistline must be seven to eight inches less than the bust measurements for sashes and wide belts. And with inches so important your posture must be straight as an arrow, or there is bound to be a bulge where the ribs leave off.

Clothes may make the woman, but this season the figure makes the clothes. The style show audience applauded loudest for a model with a gay, erect figure—whose clothes were no more beautiful than those worn by the other models. What a contrast there was between this girl and another who clumped down the promenade like a determined farmhand, head poked forward and feet moving in two awkward parallel lines. Her beautiful gown was wasted. Still another model in a tailleur—who looked well in other clothes—was noticeably thick about the waistline in the closely fitting suit.

You can pull your waist apart and slenderize this measurement by exercise and better posture. To meet the demands of the stylists we have a new illustrated exercise leaflet, "Waistlines and Beltlines." These exercises concentrate on waist and abdominal muscles. The strengthening of the abdominal muscles means the disappearance of that graceless little bulge in front. Send for the leaflet—but in the meantime, try this on your waistline:

Position: Stand erect, heels together and toes pointed out, right arm and shoulder raised high in air, chin tilted up over right shoulder, left hand also raised in air.

Movement: Holding position, bend at waist directly to the left side. Drop arms from this position and completely relax, but do not let chin drop over on chest. Alternate the sides, bending the body as far to each side as possible.

If you have any doubt that the figure is as important as the frock, think of the Hollywood designers who have moved the fashion center of the world from Paris to Hollywood . . . where clothes are designed to reveal beautiful figures.

Send for the leaflet "Waistlines and Beltlines," and remodel your waist to meet the demands of fashion. Enclose stamped, addressed envelope, and address, Ida Jean Kain, Boston Evening American.

Household Hints

If you store eggs with the small ends down they will keep better.

If syrup for hotcakes is heated before serving it brings out the flavor of the syrup and does not chill the hotcakes.

Your doughnuts will have that different flavor if one-half stick of bark of cinnamon and four whole cloves are added to the fat used in frying them.

Soot can be removed from a rug or carpet by sprinkling salt on the soot. Then sweep up the salt and the soot will be taken up with it.

To clean badly soiled wood, use a mixture consisting of one quart of hot water, three tablespoons of boiled linseed oil and one tablespoon of turpentine. Warm this and use while warm.

Flower Show Is Highlight On Social Calendar

By BETTY ALDEN

A GIRL'S EXPERIENCE as president of the Junior League, fits her for almost anything . . . but those who attended the opening of the flower show yesterday afternoon were surprised to find that Rachel Warner is a very efficient traffic cop . . .

Her job was to guide the crowd of spectators to a lane, marked off by ropes, which passed by a long row of tiny model gardens . . . and she had the situation so well in hand that during two or three hours on duty she didn't have to give out a single tag . . .

MARY ROSS

Every once in a while her mother, Mrs. Roger S. Warner, relieved her of her duties, so Rachel could wander around and view other exhibits with some of her friends . . . Mrs. Warner, one of the leaders in Garden Club activities, is a member of the committee of society women who arranged the Garden Club exhibits . . . and in honor of the show, wore her Easter bonnet made of large white, yellow and pale green daisies shaped into a small colorful toque . . .

As usual, spectators at the show could hardly believe their eyes as they came upon one wondrous exhibit after another . . . It seems almost incredible to see the flowers you cherish in your own back yard in May and June, already in bloom and shedding their sweet fragrance over the building . . . white lilacs in lovely fragrant clusters . . . yellow daffodils and primroses adding a bit of color contrast in a corner of blue and lavender tulips . . . white birches and cut leaf maples all in full foliage . . . and a rose garden that fairly takes your breath away . . .

Then too, there are all the less common types of flowers . . . standards of yellow acacia by the hundreds . . . flowering jasmine bordering a long garden path . . . cool woodland glades with babbling brooks and a vista of rhododendrons and azaleas of all colors from white through peach and lavender to deep magenta, against a background of verdant trees . . .

Some of the many socialites we recognized as we stopped to watch Rachel Warner guiding the crowd past the model gardens, included Mrs. William Davis Sohier, Mrs. Albert C. Burrage, Jr., in a tailored brown suit softened by a turban and ascot of Dubonnet and cream paisley design, and a cluster of dubonnet orchids from the Burrage hothouse pinned on her shoulder . . . Mrs. Henry Richards, chairman of the Garden Club exhibits, presented a far different picture than she had a few days previous, when we saw her on hands and knees setting out stone walls and fountains for the show . . . for in place of her dusty smock she wore a navy redingote over a splashy blue and white print, and a shiny straw hat which was most becoming . . .

Priscilla Dennett in Colorful Costume

MARY ROSS of Hingham was listening intently to a dissertation about snapdragon culture when we spied her . . . and looked very delish in a tan and rust tweed outfit with a bit of rust on her brown hat . . . Priscilla Dennett, who is to join the young married set some time in May as Mrs. John Goodrich, Jr., was dressed in a colorful outfit which rivaled the brilliance of the flowers . . . her dress of pale violet wool contrasted beautifully with a brimmed hat of the new thistle shade banded with violet . . . Mrs. Q. A. Shaw McKean was another whose outfit attracted more than one spectator's glance from the flowers . . . two silver fox scarves draped over the shoulders of a black bolero dress, with white flowers appliqued all over the bolero . . .

Mrs. Samuel Morison's candid little daughter amused the group inspecting a little model garden closet, when in answer to her mother's remark that it reminded her of the little garden shed where she hung the hose and garden implements at Bleak House, she said, "Oh no, mother, it's much too neat and tidy" . . .

Others we glimpsed in the huge throng were U. S. Representative Charles Tobey, Mrs. Josiah Childs, Janet Sibley, who is one of the chorines in the Vincent show; Anne Soutter and her mother, Sue Crocker with her mother, Mrs. S. Eliot Guild; Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Wolcott, Elizabeth Sawyer, Mrs. Winthrop Pyemont and Mrs. S. V. R. Crosby . . .

Make-Up Bands Solve Cleansing Worries

By ARLINE GOULD

IF YOU are the kind of girl who puts her face on in the morning and takes it off at night, you'll probably be glad to know of a simple little make-up band that solves cleansing worries.

Its purpose is to protect the hair from creams, powder, and other cosmetics when you cleanse your face or freshen your make-up.

It enables you to get right up to the edges of the hair without fear of smearing stray locks with greasy applications—thus insuring a thorough cleansing job.

Neither will you have to brush off excess powder from the hair because there won't be any. It's a neat looking band, made of pink elastic fabric and is perforated so as to be most comfortable when adjusted to the head.

It is really such an attractive looking affair that we know several women who wear it when they are driving their cars or while playing tennis or golf. It keeps hair so neatly in place that not even March winds can blow a curl away.

This is the kind of accessory that makes frequent face cleansings a joy. And since there is nothing like a clean face to keep the texture of the skin fine and lovely, why not indulge in one of the charming little make-up bands. They are most inexpensive in price, too.

To learn the names of these simple little make-up bands that fit the head at the hair line, call Arline Gould, Liberty 4900, or write to her at the Boston Evening American, enclosing a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

Beauty Answers

Question: I am a very light natural blonde, but unfortunately my hair is gradually growing darker. I take excellent care of it, hence it is healthy and has a nice lustre. Now what I really would like is a platinum rinse. Can you tell me how I should go about having a platinum rinse?

R. S. H., Dedham.

Answer: Send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to me for the platinum rinse leaflet. This gives full directions on how to make and apply the rinse at home. This formula is widely used and is perfectly harmless to the hair.

German Art On Display

Many paintings, drawings and water colors which have never been outside of Germany before will be displayed at a private view for members of the Boston Museum of Fine Arts on Tuesday afternoon.

This loan exhibition of German art was selected in Germany last summer from public and private collections for the Carl Schurz Foundation by Mrs. Helen Appleton Read. The exhibition has visited four American cities, and will be on view at the Boston Museum until April 18, when it will be sent to Pittsburgh for a final showing before the paintings are returned to Germany.

Among those expected to attend the opening afternoon are many museum subscribers. A group in Boston specially interested in the German exhibition includes Consul General and Frau Von Tippelskirch, Professor and Mrs. Robert Ulich, Mr. and Mrs. Russell Codman, Jr., President and Mrs. Hugh P. Baker, Mr. and Mrs. Carl Beck, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Killiam, Mrs. Mortimer Seabury, Mr. and Mrs. Edward M. Pickman, Miss Sarah Wambaugh, Professor and Mrs. Francis P. Magoun, Jr., Professor and Mrs. John A. Walz, Mr. and Mrs. Langdon Warner, Dean G. H. Chase, Mrs. Kuno Francke, Mr. and Mrs. Henry L. Harriman, Professor S. H. Cross, Mr. and Mrs. Bentley W. Warren, Mr. and Mrs. G. Sohier Welch, Mr. Emil Ahlborn, Mr. and Mrs. Francis P. Garland and Mr. and Mrs. Earl Greenidge.

Dorchester Club Plans Penny Sale

The Dorchester Social and Civic Club is holding a penny sale at its quarters, 148 Norfolk street, Tuesday evening, March 16, at 8 p. m.

Martha Rice To Wed in April

MISS MARTHA RICE, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Wallace Rice of Milton has chosen Friday, April 9, as the date of her wedding to Wethered Thomas Crocker, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Emmons Miller Crocker of New York.

The ceremony will be performed quietly in the presence of the intimate families and a few friends at the Rices' home in Milton. The Rev. Vincent T. Pomeroy of Milton will officiate.

Mrs. Kennard Woodworth (Adelaide Rice) of Charles River will be her sister's matron of honor and only attendant. Samuel E. M. Crocker, Jr., of New York will act as best man for his brother, and two other brothers, Malcolm and Quentin Crocker, will be ushers.

Other ushers will be Arthur W. Rice, brother of the bride-to-be; Frederick G. Crocker of Brookline, a cousin of the bridegroom; Carrington Clark of Kansas City, Mo.; David T. Dana, Jr., of Lenox; S. Rowland Morgan, Jr., of Chestnut Hill, Pa., and Donald Ryan of New York.

Miss Rice studied in Europe and at Milton Academy. She made her debut in the 1932-33 season and is a member of both the Junior League and the Vincent Club. Mr. Crocker was graduated from South Kent School at Kent, Ct., and is now in business in New York.

On their return from their wedding trip Mr. Crocker and his bride will reside in Tuxedo Park, New York.

Married Comrades

By ADELE GARRISON

CHAPTER 249

"HURRY! Please hurry!"

The faint plea which I realized held pain and terror, coming over the lonely lake in Mary's voice, sent a flicker of fear along my spine. What on earth could have happened to Noel and Mary on this apparently safe and idyllic fishing jaunt?

No use in wasting time in idle speculation, I reminded myself, as I watched Mr. Gibbs bending to the oars, patiently using every unit of power he possessed in the effort to reach the source of that pitiful cry.

Again and again I spoke Mary's name and Noel's, and each time it was Mary who answered.

It was a race with darkness coming so swiftly after sundown in the mountains. And when Mr. Gibbs said suddenly, "There they are!" and turned the boat toward the farther shore, I had to strain my eyes to distinguish the other boat, tiptilted in curious frightening fashion, with apparently a single occupant in a bent-over position.

"I shall have to go slowly now," Mr. Gibbs said. "Better ask her what's the matter," he added, and I obeyed him with a cold dread at my heart of what the answer might be.

"Mary, darling! what is it?" I asked. "Where is Noel?"

"Oh! you've come! Thank heaven!"

Her voice was a paean, and as she straightened herself, I saw that Noel was in the bottom of the boat, in a crouching position, with his head against her knees.

"I was afraid you wouldn't be in time," she said. "It was getting dark so fast, and there wasn't anything I could do for Noel, and—"

ABLE TO SPEAK

"I'm all right," Noel's voice croaked suddenly, and the icy constriction around my heart loosened a bit. But he did not speak again, and Mary's voice was suddenly sharp with panic.

"Noel! Noel! What is it, dear? Oh! Auntie Madge, I believe he's fainted."

"Noel hit his head on the rock," Mary said in a nervous excited voice.

"I thought so," Mr. Gibbs murmured, and I shivered a bit at what the words might imply. "Find out whether he pitched forward or went over backward."

But Mary was telling the story in her own way, a torrent of tense, excited words, and there was nothing to do but listen until her excitement should have spent itself.

"This looked like such a good place to anchor, the water was so deep," she said, "and Noel took in his oars, and got the anchor ready to put overboard."

"The anchor was hard to lift," Mary hurried on, "and Noel stood up in the boat to get a better grip on it.

BOAT STRUCK ROCK

"The boat must have drifted," Mary said with patent bewilderment that such things could be. "For, just as the anchor went over we hit a rock with a jolt. The boat slid up on it and stuck, and Noel pitched head foremost out of the boat.

"I was paralyzed for a second," Mary said. "Then Noel got back in the boat, and though he had hit the side of his head, and his poor hands and arms were all scratched and bruised by the rock.

"I was terribly worried because he was wet through and shivering. Then he felt terribly ill and nauseated and just crumbled down in the bottom of the boat. Since then he has seemed so dazed and queer. Has he fainted?"

DIRECTS Plans for Bridge Benefit

MISS ELIZABETH NORTON, member of the Senior Philomatheia executive board, heads the committee for the bridge and whist to be held at Hotel Somerset next Wednesday afternoon.

Bridge to Aid St. Mary's Asylum

One of the town's worthiest charities, St. Mary's Infant Asylum, benefits from the green bridge and whist slated for Wednesday afternoon at the Hotel Somerset.

The affair, the only one throughout the season which aids this worthy institution, is being planned by Elizabeth Norton, member of the Senior Philomatheia's executive board and chairman of this event.

The asylum was founded over 50 years ago by Monsignor Rowan, and it is from this benefit alone from which the organization realizes money to clothe and feed foundlings. It functions today under the jurisdiction of Cardinal O'Connell, president of the board of trustees, and the supervision of Monsignor Richard H. Haberlin, vice president.

Other members of the board of trustees are William H. Hardy, Edward J. O'Neil, Dr. Thomas J. Giblin, Rev. Robert Barry, Dr. John A. Foley, Frederic Moldoon and Patrick McDonald.

Bridge at the benefit is in charge of Mary Harrington, Catherine Norton and Evelyn Leeney. Alice Sullivan and Frances Wennerberg are selecting green favors in keeping with the day's decorative motif and Doris Reardon chairmans the prize committee.

All will be welcomed to the affair by Mary McDonald and Mary Haberlin, members of the reception committee. Whist is being planned by Christine Mason, Miriam Maloney and Genevieve McCrohan.

Others assisting on the committee are Louise Ryan and Mrs. Elizabeth Hayden, who comprise the door committee, and Dorothy Doyle and Marion Norton, members of the score committee.

Winchester Group To Hear Lecture

Also in recognition of St. Patrick's feast day is the novel program which the Winchester Guild of Infant Saviour has planned for next Friday morning.

Mrs. Michael Hanlon, former president of the group, is opening her home for morning coffee and a lecture to be given by Mrs. Margaret Strickland Hurley on "Claiming an Irish Heritage."

In keeping with the day is the musical program of Irish folk song to be rendered by Terry O'Toole.

Coffee will be poured by Mrs. F. W. Mullin, Mrs. William Henchey, Mrs. Virgil Ghirardini and Mrs. Edward Gallagher. Assisting at the early morning coffee will be Mrs. Loren Hinman, Mrs. Joseph Burke, Mrs. Edward McDavitt, and Mrs. Harold Partridge.

Guests will be seated by Mrs. James Carr and Mrs. Thomas Riley.

O'Malley to Talk On Soviet Failure

"Failure of Communism in Russia" will be the subject of Louis J. O'Malley, of Chestnut Hill, Boston College and M. I. T. graduate, when he lectures tomorrow afternoon in the Technical High school, Fall River, under auspices of the Knights of Columbus.

Drawing on his extensive tour through Russia, Mr. O'Malley will present intimate details of working conditions in the large industrial cities there. He will outline the problems facing the land of the Soviets.

Conant Recovering After Ski Mishap

President James Bryant Conant of Harvard was resting comfortably with a mending collar bone at home today after his ski spill at Calais, Vt.

His personal physician reported he would be confined to his home for only a few days.

I'LL MARRY TOMORROW

By LOUISE JERROLD

CHAPTER 17

A gray and silver sport roadster pulled up at the curb. Out sprang Gardiner Hall, tall, elegant, debonair. Lilian emerged all laughter and radiance. The two young people raced over the sidewalk and up the steps.

"Lo, everybody," cried Lilian, exquisite in an imported white silk sports outfit. "Picked up this tramp——"

"Thought I did the pick up, lady," murmured Gardiner, his hands holding Paula's despite her quiet efforts to free them. His eyes tried vainly to hold her gaze.

"And brought him home to dinner," laughed Lilian, coolly ignoring the interruption. "Lo, David." She gave his shoulder a friendly tap with the hand on which flashed a magnificent square-cut diamond.

Paula heard herself answer a low-voiced query of Gardiner's, but though her lips spoke she heard her words as though someone else were speaking. She had caught the expression of tenderness that softened David's face at Lilian's careless tap. Had man love kindle in his eyes.

Family Party?

"Why not make it a family party?" she managed a steady voice. Then gaily, "Stay to dinner, David."

"Where David goes, or rather stays, there stay I," Gardiner grinned like a jolly boy.

"You've already been invited, Gardy," Lilian said.

"Not by you, carissima." The low-cadenced words were for her ears alone.

Carissima indeed! Did he think her an impressionable school-girl? Light of love was he. He knew the alpha and omega of love, did he? Later on, she would make him understand.

No sign of her irritation showed in her serene manner or in the smile that always made her face lovely. "Of course you're invited, Gardiner. You and David can't be divided—yet."

Dinner assumed a social air that evening. Seven chimes of the Chinese gong brought family and guests to the table with its shiny white cloth, lighted wax tapers flanking a silver bowl of pink asters and fragile old china-ware.

No one but Horace fully appreciated the nerve-racking labor behind the material and artistic effects of that dinner.

He had proved a zestful and efficient ally.

"Lucky we had that swell big roast last night to cut up cold. Jelly, Paula? Pickles, too? Now, what do you want, radiant near-bride?"

"Not you, youngster," Lilian retorted pertly, in high good humor. "Where's—oh, Paul, make mamsie put on her best bib and tucker, and Dad a clean collar. I'd help—gladly—but I'm showing Gardy and David the presents that came today. Aren't some of the family friends doing the handsome by us?"

"And, Horace Lyle, don't forget behind your ears tonight," she admonished, wisely putting the length of the kitchen between them. "You know, Paul," from the doorway, with a plaintive note, "I want everything as nice as it can be in this old shack. David and Gardy've been everywhere and are used to the very best."

"Snob," Horace jeered, but the kitchen door swung to behind Lilian. He turned to Paula with a flourish of the potato-masher. "If that Hall swell doesn't lap up every crumb on his plate, I'll sock him one."

But Horace did not have to carry out his threat. Gardiner Hall ate with undisguised gusto, and was so thoroughly delightful a guest that the boy was an immediate victim to his charm.

Under cover of refilling the water goblets Horace whispered to Paula, "A stout fella. Look at dad."

A Happy House

But Paula knew without looking that Peter Lyle had been drawn, unknowingly, out of his shell of reserve and self-doubt. Momentarily he had forgotten he was an elderly failure.

His usually tired eyes shone under the spell of Gardiner Hall's well told tales of his wanderings with the stewart—fables and son, up and down the face of the world.

Gardiner had the gift of narrative. With words apparently ordinary but really chosen with artistry, he could picture for them scenes as a painter with brush and canvas. The minarets of Stamboul. A hazardous journey camel-back over hot sands. A penniless woman-gambler at Monte Carlo.

And vicariously Peter who sometimes forgot to brush his clothes and shoes, was satisfying a never-gratified urge for the adventure of the mysterious highways and byways of the earth.

But Mrs. Lyle showed unmistakable signs of relief when a break came in Gardiner's easy flow of speech. At last her moment had come. She sat like a queen enthroned in her high-ioned chair, filling her role of gracious hostess.

To Lilian's evident satisfaction her mother looked her best in a house gown of the same soft gray as her parted and low-coiled wealth of hair. Excitement had given color to cheeks grown flabby and wrinkled like dried apples. Her faded blue eyes were bright with complacence.

"I traveled extensively, too, when a mere chit of a girl," she began, her little finger curled gracefully over her cup-handle, and reminiscently her monologue ran on and on.

Fortunately for Lilian's mounting impatience an interruption came at last.

A water goblet slipped from Horace's hand. The glass shivered into bits on the edge of the table and Gardiner received a liberal shower of glass and water.

An Omen?

"No harm done," he laughed reassuringly. "Besides broken glass always brings good luck."

He was the kind of man who would make a day seem pleasant even if the east wind were blowing, Paula found herself thinking, as she helped him repair the damage.

"Speaking of good luck, Gardy has a wonderful collection of luck-stones and charms gathered from out-of-the-way corners of the world. You'll be interested." David spoke to Paula, but his eyes sought Lilian's. She did not meet his gaze.

Apparently she was watching the rainbow of color the candle-lights struck from the diamond on her finger. But Paula was convinced from the bitter twist of the lips, the somber eyes that her sister followed Leslie Evans in thought.

Dinner over, as Gardiner seated Paula in his sports car, he bantered, "All my luck-stones and charms must be working for me tonight, carissima. I'm having you all to myself. I was afraid Lilian would insist on the four of us riding together in David's car."

She shot a glance up at her companion and noted with admiration the fine, aquiline nose, the mobile mouth carved for humor and laughter, his well-proportioned head and shoulders.

Aloud she said matter-of-factly, "I'll have time for just a peep at David's house. I promised mother to read her to sleep tonight."

"Have you no life of your own?" Gardiner demanded with sudden vehemence. "Haven't you learned yet that we have only a few more years in which to live fully, joyously, perfectly?"

"For You and Me"

Expertly swinging the car between two huge automobile carriers he exulted. "A night made for you and me." He headed for the Grand Boulevard. "If I had the magic carpet tonight, I'd transport us both to Delhi, to see the sunset from the 'Ridge.' We'd park the car by an Asoka pillar—"

He had lit a cigarette and was carefully sending puffs of smoke out of the open window beside him. Dexterously he made the car weave in and out of the tangle of traffic.

Paula was contentedly silent and did not speak again until they had sped several miles northward on Woodward avenue. "Look back," she cried out unexpectedly.

Gardiner slid the car to the curb and shut off the engine.

There, behind them, with a dark sapphire-blue sky for background the slender column of the Fisher Tower reared itself proudly—gold capped, flood-lighted. And floating above it, the silver sphere of the moon.

"Superb," broke from Gardiner's lips, and Paula nodded.

He looked down at her from a fleeting moment. His eyes and mouth laughed at her. "You've a passion for beauty. I have, too, but I like mine seasoned with pleasure. Some day—" his voice deepened. "I'll show you the famous beauty spots—"

He broke off abruptly, warned perhaps by Paula's involuntary withdrawal of herself to the edge of the seat.

"My grandfather lived there." Gardiner pointed out a square-built house of stone, surrounded by trees and set in wide stretches of greensward.

Paula glimpsed white marble urns on the terraced grounds, stone steps, a broad driveway, before the car flashed by.

"Grandfather died when I was just two years old. My lawyers nag me to sell the house, but something, sentiment maybe—" he shrugged.

"Turn it into a home for children, crippled children," she suggested.

"Crippled children! But you know I like only bright, gay things. Sick children! No, my dear."

"Why not? You wouldn't ever have to see them. You wouldn't have to give yourself. Just money. And you're gloriously rich."

They sped along in silence for some blocks. Once he exclaimed under his breath, "Gloriously rich!" and fell to whistling softly.

Joyous excitement pulsed in Paula. How wonderful if he would transform that huge old house into a home for unfortunate children!

HEARING
On Gas Tax
CONTROL

Frederick Hoitt of the New England Road Builders Association gives a report concerning the conference this week with the Committee on Constitutional Law of the Massachusetts Legislature heard the initiative petition of James M. Keefe and others for an amendment to the Massachusetts Constitution to stop the diversion of gasoline tax revenue. Representatives of motorists' organization from all sections of the state were present and spoke in favor of the proposed amendment. James M. Keefe, president of the Massachusetts Federation of AAA Clubs conducted the case for the proponents and introduced the speakers.

In addition to presenting the well-known and unanswerable arguments against the diversion practice, a number of the speakers cited the rising volume of resentment among motor vehicle owners against this abuse. They also insisted that the proposal be submitted to the people for approval or rejection. A solid front was presented by highway user interests.

The sole opposition at the hearing on Wednesday, March 10, on the Initiative Petition for an Amendment to the Massachusetts Constitution to Stop Gasoline Tax Diversion, was by Norman MacDonald, executive secretary of the Massachusetts Federation of Taxpayers' Associations. MacDonald spoke strongly against the diversion practice, but then proceeded to make two criticisms and one suggestion relative to the initiative petition under consideration.

POINTS IN OPPOSITION

MacDonald's first criticism was that the petition as worded might be construed as taking from the legislature the power to make appropriations from the special highway revenues described therein and dump all that money into the lap of the Department of Public Works to spend without any power of control by the legislature. It is certain the sponsors of the petition had no thought to bring about such a result. The petition was drafted as a limitation upon the purposes for which the special motor vehicle tax revenues may be expended, but leaves open to the legislature the making of appropriations in such amounts and for such highway purposes as the wisdom of the legislature may dictate. The petition would be defective if in it attempt had been made to appropriate the money.

With this petition adopted and in effect the existing provisions in the constitution relative to the origin of money bills and relative to the budget and regulation of money bills, would remain unaffected and undisturbed, and would apply to appropriations from the special highway revenues, subject to the restriction that they could not be appropriated for other than highway purposes.

NEW CENTRALIZING CONTROL

MacDonald's second criticism was to that part of the petition which provides that expenditures of the special highway revenues shall be under the direction and supervision of the state department having jurisdiction over state highways and bridges. That provision was incorporated to assure centralized control and responsibility in the appropriate state department and in the interests of efficient and economical expenditures of the funds. MacDonald, on the other hand, argued for substantial distributions to the cities and towns, which would mean uncontrolled, unchecked expenditures by 355 local officials as compared to the centralized control and responsibility in the heads of a state department provided for in the petition.

MacDonald's suggestion was that the petition be referred to the proposed new commisison on taxation and expenditure for study and report. It is questionable whether the committee on constitutional law would be acting in a constitutional manner if it should delegate its duty in this matter to an outside commision and substitute the consideration and judgment of that outside commision for its own consideration and judgment.

Sharp Gain Seen In Goodall Sales

Continuous full-time employment for all 1150 Goodall Co. employes for at least another year was predicted by Elmer Ward, president.

"The styling and quality of Palm Beach suits have definitely improved over last season, and we anticipate another sell-out season such as we had last year," he said. "That means another 50-week working year for our employes.

"We hit the highest weekly payroll in our history in Knoxville two weeks ago. It amounted to $22,500. Last year our business showed a 51 per cent increase and this year sales will top that by 38 per cent."

Bituminous Coal Production Up

National Coal Association estimates bituminous coal production in the United States for the week ended March 6 as approximately 11,150,000 net tons. Production for the corresponding week of 1936 was 8,890,000 tons, and in 1935, 8,782,000 tons.

Report of the Bureau of Mines shows production of 10,744,000 tons for the week ended February 20, and 11,081,000 for the week ended February 27, 1937.

Honey's Question Box

Buying Utilities
STOCK NOW MEANS
Gambling on Politics

By LEWIS HANEY
Professor of Economics, New York University

New York, March 13—Bayonne, N. J., asks: "Would you kindly give your opinion of (a certain utility stock). Would it be advisable to hold or sell? Do you think it has any market value?"

Ans.: This is one of the many uncertainties caused by government interfenece with economic affairs. No one can be sure about the matter.

This company, like most utilities, is efficient and shows good earnings. But as things are, you will have to gamble on politics.

* * *

Detroit, Mich., says: "When Mr. Roosevelt tries to give a few crumbs to a poor untouchable (worker) you no see nothing. When capitalistic slave drivers are wearing the health and life out of the poor cuss to make millions for themselves, you like that, don't you?"

Ans.: The Roosevelt administration, as I understand it, has not been even trying to give crumbs. It gives paper currency, which is a promise to pay more paper currency.

It gives to farmers to help them meet higher costs of supplies, and gives to city laborers to help them meet higher farm products! (Higher living costs will, in due time, take it away from both.)

It seems just a little out of date at this time to describe what is going on as capitalistic slave driving.

What sort of crumbs would anybody be able to give if somebody did not do the saving and investing that supply and maintain the plant and equipment to work with? What would become of such crumbs as a car and radio, if there were no business enterprise to organize and direct labor, and all the buying and selling that are required?

* * *

A New York city man asks: "Since the great unorganized middle class has been well squeezed by depression and is now oppressed by high taxes and support of the unemployed, will it be able to bear another load?

Answer: For a while, I think so. There will be less of a drain to help relatives and friends. A little more of dividends comes in. The salary is raised, etc.

But within a year or two, the growing cost of living will catch up. Perhaps fresh losses on securities will have to be taken, especially on the utility investments. Higher wages, materials and taxes will eat up small business profits.

* * *

"The President has suggested a move to restrict profits in 'interstate commerce' to a 'reasonable basis,' in order to restrain the corresponding rise in cost of living. Is it not the plan to pack the Supreme Court in line with this idea?"

Answer: The plan concerning the court is designed to enable the administration to do what it wishes.

It does not follow, however, that what it wishes to do will succeed in getting the desired results.

For example, I think that in most industries profits do not raise the cost of living. The reason is that if we didn't have efficient enterprise, things would cost more; and if we didn't allow liberal profits, we would not get the best enterprise.

Expansion Coming In Oil Industry

The outlook for expansion of the oil industry in the current year is even more favorable than that which has been felt at the beginning of the past two years of increased production and consumption states Mr. V. Genna of Genna and Co., Boston, dealers in Producing Oil Royalties.

The industry has had two years of amazing increased demand for its products, climaxed by the year 1936 with a gain of more than one hundred million barrels in domestic crude requirements which have now passed the pre-depression peak of 1929. Many of the facilities such as pipe lines and refineries are operating in excess of their economic capacities and a period is now at hand when the industry must make realignment and expand its physical properties in keeping with a picture that is inevitably changing.

Now due to increased demand for it and its by-products pipe line systems are finding it necessary to expand, improve and coordinate operations in order to maintain their main objective, namely maximum efficiency in the movement of crude oil to its market.

During the period of curtailment of production there was little incentive for expansion, however, the situation has now changed. With more stable conditions, an increase in crude demand of more than 200,000 barrels daily and a gain of about 8 per cent in motor fuel demand alone, the industry must prepare itself to take care of a third and more abundant year in 1937. This will call for greatly enlarged expenditures for replacement and expansion, but the prospect requires and justifies it. Mr. Genna has prepared a new and most comprehensive booklet on the oil industry and Producing Oil Royalties, which may be obtained with no obligation.

Auto Financing Off

Dollar volume of retail automobile financing for January decreased 27.4 per cent from December, Department of Commerce reported, at $107,537,399, against $148,100,585 in December. Wholesale financing declined 14.4 per cent from $185,578,504 to $158,936,326.

Commodity nIdex

Wholesale commodity prices were unchanged during the week ended March 6 at 86.1 per cent of 1926 average, Bureau of Labor Statistics reports. Index is 8 per cent above March 7, 1936.

Earnings Are High For Prudential

That many well selected low priced stocks may do better on a percentage basis, over a period of rising security prices, than higher priced ones, is the firm belief of the president of the Prudential Security Company.

Support of this belief is attested to by the spectacular rise in the price of the shares of the Prudential Security Company, which have almost tripled in price in the past nine months, being currently offered at around three dollars per share.

Not only have these shares enjoyed a substantial appreciation but they have paid fine dividends. Fifteen per cent was paid in 1936, and a ten per cent dividend disbursement has been declared for distribution on March 31st of this year to stockholders of record as of March 27, 1937.

Credit for the high earnings record of the Prudential Security Company is due to the close supervision which the Company receives in each field of its operations.

The Company has all the necessary facilities, Teletype System, New York Wire, etc., to engage efficiently in the investing of its own funds, maintaining wholesale markets for dealers in "over the counter" securities, underwriting and distributing issues of merit through its broad dealer relationship.

Manwaring & Company handle Prudential Securities shares.

February Machine Tool Trade Off

Machine tool buying slumped off again in February for the second consecutive month since the record-breaking December.

Domestic business, undoubtedly influenced by the General Motors strike and the flood conditions throughout the wide area of the Ohio Valley, dropped 21 per cent under January, but still was maintained at a higher rate than in any month last year with the exception of December. Foreign business was also off slightly from the two preceding months.

Cotton Consumption

New York Cotton Exchange Service estimates domestic consumption of cotton in February at 655,000 bales, against 678,000 in January and 516,000 in February, 1936. Daily rate in February was about 33,200, against 32,700 in January and 25,800 in February, 1936.

WORKERS
Good Will RETAINED

W. G. Marshall, vice president, Industrial Relations, Westinghouse Mfg. Co., gives further details of the methods used by his company to retain the good will of employees.

"Employment in the first instance is contingent upon passing a physical examination. Incapacitated employes are carried on the salary roll at their established rates for one month and after that may be transferred to the co-operative Relief Association. Recommendation of desirable applicants by present employes is encouraged. Interviews are granted to all who seek them. All correspondence regarding employment is acknowledged.

"Inter-department transfer is encouraged in the interest of developing a breadth of understanding of the company's business.

"In periods of reduction of force, it is the policy to furlough rather than separate desirable employes, giving them preference in re-employment. In the event of return within a year after involuntary separation, employment is considered continuous. It is the policy of the company to encourage and grant a final interview in all cases of separation from the roll.

"Someone might say, it is all well enough to generalize but what about translating generalities into practice? Employment is one opportunity. We have heard recently much discussion about men and machines. Our attention should be directed to men and materials. In industry we use care in the purchase of materials; we have tests to determine whether or not these materials meet our rigid specifications. The same rule should apply to hiring men and women. As with materials, there are kinds of quality in human beings ranging from superior to inferior. Our plants and offices cannot operate successfully with inferior material, nor with inferior persons. We all desire to make and sell a quality product, and to continue to do so our material and our men and women must be superior.

"As business improves and new employes are added to our rolls, employment departments should exercise every precaution in making sure that the quality of new personnel is at least equal to the quality of material.

OLD FACES ON ROLL

"Perhaps before employment, we should say re-employment. Great resources of furloughed men and women with years of experience are now available. If the policy of the company is to return these persons to their employment, that policy should be put to work. Let it be seen that as the force is expanded, old names reappear on the roll along with new names. A fair practice might be to make it man for man.

"There is a principle in seniority that cannot be neglected. Length of service, other things being equal, should prevail in separations, in employment and in re-employment. Former employes, all things being equal, if they are returned within a reasonable time, should be given the benefits they enjoyed at the time of separation. Such matters have an application in retirement credits, relief and medical associations, group insurance, and the like. The principle of seniority goes deep in the mind of the human being, no matter what station in life."

More of Mr. Marshall's views will be given subsequently on this page.

January Air Traffic Gains

Scheduled air lines in the United States carried 46,012 passengers in January, compared with 44,016 in January last year, the Department of Commerce reported.

During the month, the air lines flew 21,378,754 passenger miles and carried 554,034 pounds of express, against 18,982,807 passenger miles and 354,301 pounds of express in January, 1936.

NFLATION

Major TOPIC OF Week

By LESLIE GOULD
International News Service
Financial Editor

New York, March 13—nflation has again come to the front this week, along with a renewal of serious labor troubles in the motor car industry.

It has been reflected more in break in the high grade and vernment bonds and boiling commodities than in the stock arket. The stock market on e week is lower.

The crack up in the high grade ond market, which has been coming to a head in recent weeks, folws the failure of several recent rge issues to go over very well.

* * *

Trading in government bonds oday on the new stock exchange as the heaviest since Dec. 30, 20—a space of 16 years. Losses nged to almost a full point. How astic a decline this is may be dged by the fact a 32nd of a oint is a normal fluctuation.

In addition to the inflation, a epressing factor has been sales r meeting income tax instalments well as liquidation by banks preparation for the increased serve requirements. The reserve quirements go into effect in two stalments. The first part was n March 1 and the final on May 1.

* * *

There has been boom trading in e commodities with new highs the last seven years and more stablished by many. Most active ave been cotton, copper, tin, lead nd rubber.

The commodity markets, however, turned irregular toward the ose of the week, following a sharp reak in tin on the raising of roduction quotas due to the higher rices.

The rise in commodity prices, lus the higher wages being grantd throughout industry, is going mean much higher prices for nished products. That means a igher cost of living. And that inflation.

* * *

Labor developments have taken serious turn with the Chrysler ant shut down by "sit downs." he strike in the Chrysler plants oke suddenly on Monday and it pset the market that day, with a harp break in the Chrysler Common. Even officials of the plant ave been locked out by the strikrs. It is repetition of the General Motors strike.

* * *

The stock market has been lower three of the five trading sessions f the week, with substantial losses uffered on Monday and Thursay. The markets were moderately igher Tuesday and quite strong Vednesday.

On the week the industrial price verages are off nearly 3 points, he utilities about 1¼ points while he rails are down as a group less han a half point.

The following table shows the ange on the week of the leading tock and bond price averages with ast night's close and the net hange on the week.

INDUSTRIAL STOCKS

The lows for the week were made Friday.

* * *

The outstanding performers were the metal and rubber stocks on the upside. The following table shows last night's close and the net change from last Saturday of active leaders in those two groups.

	Last Night Close	Net Chge On Week
Am Zinc	18⅝	+ 1⅝
Am Smelting	103½	+ 8
Anaconda	67⅛	+ 2⅛
St. Joe Lead	63	+ 6⅛

U.S. Leather pfd	106	+ 2
Firestone	39	+ ⅛
Goodrich	48⅞	+ 3⅛
Goodyear	45⅞	+ 4⅛
U. S. Rubber	67	+ 5

These gains have been made while the general market average has lost nearly 3 points.

* * *

On the other side of the market ledger are the tobacco stocks. These have broke sharply following a disappointing earnings report by American Tobacco and announcement by the Liggett & Myers president that higher tobacco prices this year will mean lower earnings.

Here's the way the tobaccos moved:

	Last Night Close	Net Chge On Week
Am Tobacco "B"	83	—12
Liggett&Myers "B"	101	—12
Lorillard	24⅜	— 2⅛
Reynolds "B"	51	— 3⅛

This it is shown that inflation may be good for some stocks, but for others it is a bearish factor. The public utilities are in this latter group.

Torrington Co.

Torrington Co. declared regular quarterly dividend of $1 per share, payable April 1 to stock of record March 13.

STOCKS Turn LOWER

STEEL SHARES DECLINE

New York, March 13—The stock market turned irregularly lower today after a firm start. The early upward tendency was checked by a number of unsettling factors including further tax selling, renewed pressure on the government bond list and the Detroit automobile strike situation.

Steels turned downward after a firm opening. U. S. Steel went over a point under the previous close. Republic Steel was a strong opener on a 5000-share block but later lost its gain and showed a fraction loss.

There was scattered strength in the rails. N. Y. Central gained around a point, starting with 4000 shares but gave up most of its rise later. Atchison remained firm, as did B. & O.

Chrysler was up around a point at one time but lost this later and went under the previous close. General Motors followed a similar pattern.

Leathers Active

The leather stocks, buoyant yesterday, were again active but gains were limited in comparison with the sweeping gains in the previous session.

Lower prices ruled in most coppers though International Nickel was a firm spot. Utilities showed further scattered pressure with Consolidated Edison and Electric Power & Light easy. Oils were without definite trend, gains in a few issues like Standard of New Jersey being offset by declines in others. Little of consequence developed in aviations and amusements. Mail orders were firm.

Trading turned dull after some activity in the early dealings. Commodities were mixed with wheat lower.

Current Items

Boardroom sentiment was somewhat depressed before the opening but it was noted most business items were on the cheerful side.

Helpful for the long-lagging utilities were estimates net income for the principal systems in January and February topped that for the same 1936 period by about 10 per cent. The same rate of improvement was expected to prevail during March.

In many instances, it was explained, first quarter operations will reflect for the first time savings from large refundings.

In initial foreign exchange transactions the French franc was unchanged at 4.55⅛ cents. Sterling was 3-16 of a cent higher at $4.88 11-16.

'Change Trading Study Planned

A special committee has been appointed by the Governing Committee of the New York Stock Exchange to study the secondary distribution and trading off the exchange floor in listed securities.

The committee, composed of Howland S. Davis, Laurence M. Marks, Harry H. Moore, William P. O'Connor, Herbert G. Wellington and Richard Whitney, has been formed for the purpose of coordinating and developing a set of rules and policy for the various standing committees of the Exchange with relation to secondary distribution off the floor.

Comments of Brokers

Until the bond market stops declining the stock market will necessarily remain in pretty much of a speculative position and show considerable irregularity.—J. S. Wilson, Josephthal & Co.

We continue to believe that a constructive attitude toward the market is warranted and that new purchases of sound issues are justified. — Berry Grant, Hornblower & Weeks.

The course of business and corporate earnings indicates an extension of the advance in junior and purely speculative bonds.—F. H. Richardson, Southgate & Co.

Friday's bottoms will now serve as guide posts against which to check subsequent market action. Those lows should hold in a majority of stocks on any secondary dip if the reaction is to be held to only minor proportions.—H. D. Comer, Paine, Webber & Co.

Statistics from industry still appear to point to fair weather. Elmer H. Bright & Co.

Daily news covering price adjustments, therefore, should be closely watched as a cue for trading opportunities in the groups affected. J. S. Bacher & Co.

While such factors cause momentary setbacks they do not change the main bullish trend. J. P. Maher-Ehlaid & Co.

FRENCH Loan Huge SUCCESS

SECOND ISSUE TUESDAY

Universal Service Special Cable

Paris, March 13—The French Ministry of Finance last night announced the first day's offerings of subscriptions for a defense loan had been met by "an almost unprecedented rush" of buyers who poured out a sum easily exceeding the five billion franc figure.

Although accurate figures on the government bond sale were not immediately available, those close to the finance ministry freely predicted a decree officially closing the first installment of the war issue tomorrow. In view of today's success these authorities added a second issue would be launched Tuesday.

Finance Minister Vincent Auriol and Premier Blum were in conference, awaiting complete reports on the monetary plan. They are said to be awaiting returns from provincial banks.

Simultaneously, the Bank of France announced it had received more gold yesterday than during any such period in the past year. This was seen as an indication that hoarded capital was beginning to loosen up.

The entire defense loan was set at $485,000,000, with the first issue amounting to $228,300,000 (five billion francs).

The defense bill abrogated the penalty clauses of existing laws against gold hoarders in an effort to bring secret caches to the country's aid.

AURIOL CONGRATULATED FOR SUCCESSFUL FLOTATION

Paris, March 13 (INS)—The ministerial council today congratulated Finance Minister Vincent Auriol for successful flotation of the French defense loan and heard details of the second issue scheduled for Tuesday.

Foreign Minister Yvon Delbos outlined to the council France's part in the Spanish non-intervention control measures.

Morgenthau Confers With Burgess

Washington, March 13 (AP)—W. Randolph Burgess, vice-president of the New York Federal Reserve Bank, conferred today with Secretary Morgenthau, presumably to discuss the government bond market.

Although Burgess declined to discuss the talk, informed authorities assumed it had dealt with yesterday's heavy selling of government obligations.

Burgess is manager of the reserve system's open market account, and, in this position, has an influential voice in the board's policy on sale or purchase of government obligations.

The reserve board's open market committee could support the government bond market with purchases on the open market. Whether such a course was discussed at the conference today could not be definitely ascertained.

Square D Stock Plan Is Approved

Plan of Square D Co. to exchange Class A no-par preferred stock on a share-for-share basis for Class B common stock of $1 par has been approved by stockholders and directors and is declared effective subject to listing with the New York Stock Exchange and clearance with the SEC.

Instructions as to date of exchange and other details will be sent to Class A preferred stockholders as soon as practicable.

PUBLIC SPENDING

Enters RETRENCH Phase

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER
(Copyright, 1937, by Universal Service)

New York, March 13—The American people must soon be coming to grips with the problem of modifying the course of the business cycle.

During the nadir of the depression, it was strongly argued that the federal budget need not be balanced on a year to year basis, but on the basis of an entire cycle.

The thought was that it was proper to go into debt in times of depression and to pay off the debt in periods of recovery and prosperity.

As a phase of this, it was urged that in times of subnormal business that governmental public works be expanded, and then tapered off as private business recovered.

Public men succeeded in putting across the spending aspect of the problem.

Now that industrial production has substantially recovered, we are approaching a test as to whether it will be politically feasible to enter the retrenchment phase of public spending.

Otto T. Mallery of Philadelphia, public works authority, recently declared that the time had come for sharply tapering off public works activities.

* * *

President Roosevelt in his budget message has tied up public finance with recovery in private business.

Unless popular opinion is mobilized in favor of a curtailment of public expenditures, this phase of economic management in the large may run into a snag.

Spending builds up groups with vested interests in continuing the program.

Harry Hopkins, relief administrator, has talked about continuance of a permanent army of the unemployed, even in periods of prosperity. He mentioned much larger figures than the float of 1,600,000 to 2,000,000 which economic statisticians usually count on for normal unemployment.

Some thoughtful business statisticians have computed that another 10 per cent rise in business could absorb all the unemployed except the normal float.

* * *

Unless there is tapering off, deficit financing at this stage has strong inflationary implications.

Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the governing board of the Federal Reserve System, has for months felt that reflation had achieved its legitimate objectives, and that counter-inflationary measures were indicated. As a result, there have been successive increases in the reserve requirements of banks and also sterilization of new gold imports.

Later other control devices might be used, including selling of government bonds by the Federal Reserve Banks, cessation of buying of newly mined foreign gold, and eventually even conceivably increasing the gold content of the dollar.

Yet more important than such manipulative changes is the restraint which would come from a reversal of Federal deficit financing, and entering a period of actual reduction in the national debt.

* * *

Unless prompt action is taken to counteract inflationary potentialities, then the gains to labor in the form of current money wage increases may prove illusory.

Forces already at work are widely expected to carry the level of commodity prices still higher.

Some economists, who have examined the sequence of events in previous comparable periods, point out that an unusual price rise might not necessarily be favorable to business profit margins. In the war boom, the best rate of profits was attained in 1916 and 1917 before the great upturn in commodity prices.

Although prices almost doubled before the episode was over, no corresponding increase in business volume took place. Profits were thereafter limited by rising labor costs, by increased capital expenditures for expansion, by inventory write-offs, and by whipsawing those unable to foretell fluctuations in raw material prices.

* * *

As against inflationary potentials in the present situation, political fears as well as uncertainty engendered by labor unions act as restraints against over-optimism on the part of business men.

Prospects for dampening excessive bullish zeal would be heightened if the federal government would take a new course, and begin to eliminate spending originally designed to prime the pump.

A decision to emulate Secretary Mellon's debt reduction program, carried on to the tune of a thousand million dollars a year during the last period of prosperity, would be helpful.

The question is whether the great multitudes of people who would benefit from such a sane program will become articulate.

BOSTON after DARK

(THIS BUSINESS of assuring everyone that the Holland is getting along swell while he lies back on his bed at St. Elizabeth's and enjoys the comfort of a fractured leg in ease and practically affluence is getting pretty tiresome, on account of the Thin Man can always see the Dark Side

GEORGE HOLLAND

It's been like that pretty much all of the time. We remember last summer, when he sold his play to RKO for the movies and everyone was congratulating him, he was not a little gloomy about it. "Yeah but now they'll expect me to do another one," was what George said.

Another time we were all going over to South Boston to go sailing one night and George was worried about the wind, remarking that we'd probably tip over and get drowned. And when the wind died down and we had to start the motor he said he had a feeling we'd run out of gas far from land, or at least run out of liquor. You can always have fun and a couple of laughs with the Thin Man around.

So today when the messages continued to pour into his hospital stateroom, he looked pretty downcast and when we asked him the reason he waved his hands—like this—and he said sadly, "It's all right for you, but I've got to answer all of them."

Always bubbling over with gayety—that's the Thin Man But it's all in fun)

Astaire-Lombard Lineup Likely

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Los Angeles, March 13—I don't suppose Fred Astaire in his wildest dreams hoped to be able to get Carole Lombard for his co-starring partner in "Damsel In Distress." Every producer in Hollywood submitted a script to Missy Lombard but she has very wisely taken her time to make her choice of a screen play.

Tilden, PERRY Match

Youth vs. Experience

William T. Tilden, II, couldn't stay out of the tennis picture very long.

The "Daddy" of the racquets will clash with Fred Perry of England at the Boston Garden on Monday, April 5. It will be the last of a Tilden-Perry five-game series, the first match to be held at Madison Square Garden, New York.

Both athletes have been world amateur tennis champions, but the coming series will mark the first time that they have played against each other.

Tilden has won the men's singles championship outdoors seven times.

Father Time seems to offer "Big Bill" little worry, since he is already 43 years old. He has been a top-notch tennis performer for nearly 25 years.

It was back in 1913 when Tilden first gained major recognition from the tennis world. That year he combined with Mary K. Browne to win the mixed doubles championship.

The youthful and energetic Perry will have no easy tussle in the coming series, a battle of youth versus experience.

By DANIEL J. MORETTI, 15 Queen St., Cranston, R. I.
One dollar will be sent for the above story.

FASHIONS DEMAND SUITS

There is nothing like a new suit to cheer up a girl in this in-between season—and there are a great many types of suits that will do the trick nicely.

The tailored suit is always satisfying and practical—especially for a business girl. The most popular new fabric for tailored suits seems to be sharkskin, with the more conservative colors prevailing.

But if you want a suit that will make you feel fresh and young and exciting, why not decide to get a page boy suit? A page boy suit, with a cute little hip-bone length jacket, is engagingly feminine and in one of the luscious new spring colors will give you a new outlook on life and make you feel amazingly delectable.

The acquisition of a [illegible] suit—one of the newest developments in the fashion world—will put you at least a jump ahead of your friends. You needn't be afraid that the suit will be too extreme, for, although it is new, it is already quite popular.

The cape suit is another popular version of the suit. It usually consists of a slim skirt with a lightweight jacket buttoning down the front and is topped by a smart little cape which may be removed in balmy weather and worn on chilly days.

Once you have selected your suit, it is a simple matter to find—at an amazingly low cost—some clever little printed blouses that will positively "make" your suit.

St. Patrick's Life Shows Greatness

St. Patrick was not an Irishman!

He was born in Tours, France, in the year 378 A. D. His father's name was Calpurnius and his mother's Conchessa, who was a sister of St. Martin, the Bishop of Tours.

Marauders kidnaped St. Patrick when he was 16 and carried him off to Ireland. A Druid priest bought the youngster, for sheep tending.

His life was one filled with hardships. Many times he was faced with starvation; many times he was treated harshly by his masters, but he never lost hope.

The name of St. Patrick will live in the hearts of all Irishmen for, single-handed, he began the Christianization of Ireland.

The world of today could readily use a person like St. Patrick.

BOYS FAIL AS BANK THIEVES

(A SHORT STORY)

The two youths looked up suddenly from where they were stuffing currency into a large yellow traveling bag. To their great dismay, the night watchman of the bank was standing before them.

"I guess someone made a mistake when they hired you two boys as tellers in this bank," he remarked quietly, a gun in his hand. "Who would ever have thought that you would go so low as to double-cross the man who hired you in good confidence?

"I've known both of you since you were kids, and I guess I just couldn't see you as convicts, so get out and never try anything like this again."

The youths walked out, very mortified. To think that they had been caught in a dishonest act! It was a good thing that the watchman had been a friend of their families.

"I guess I'm kind of glad that he did catch us now," one of them said. "The disgrace would have killed my mother."

"We'll have to find another job, that's all," suggested the other.

The next morning two youthful figures were seen entering an employment office. At the same time, on a freight bound southward, was an elderly man, formerly a night watchman in a bank, carrying a yellow traveling bag and chuckling slyly to himself.

New Deal NOT Very New

Who said anything about a "New" Deal? If we are to believe Professor Frederick Starr in his book, "Confucianism," there is nothing new about the New Deal.

According to the professor, way back in the 11th century a worthy Chinese named Wang An Shih shuffled a shiny new pack of political cards for the Chinese underdog of his time.

He put in motion the nationalizing of commerce, industry and agriculture. He busied himself about equalizing the wealth and uplifting the poor. He put into effect state loans and exempted the needy from taxation.

Furthermore, a gentleman named Mencius, born in China about 372 B. C., did a lot of talking about social security and conservation of natural resources. He and his contemporaries were educated in state-maintained public schools!

Could it have been an ancestor of Dr. Townsend that advised the Chinese people about that time to look to the planting of mulberry trees that "persons of 50 years will be able to wear silk", and to the proper breeding of pigs that "persons of 70 years may be able to eat flesh"?

Truly, man progresses, but he seems to be in danger of meeting himself coming back!

CLIPPER SPEEDY

Years ago it took many days to cross the Atlantic or Pacific oceans. Men sailed in small boats and many never returned.

Today the China Clipper goes over the Pacific in five days, with 60 hours of actual flying time.

The clipper starts from San Francisco, Cal., and flies to the Hawaiian Islands, which is the first stop of the long journey.

From there it goes on to make stops at Midway Island, Wake, Guam Islands and then China.

The clipper planes carry both mail and passengers safely from the United States to the Orient.

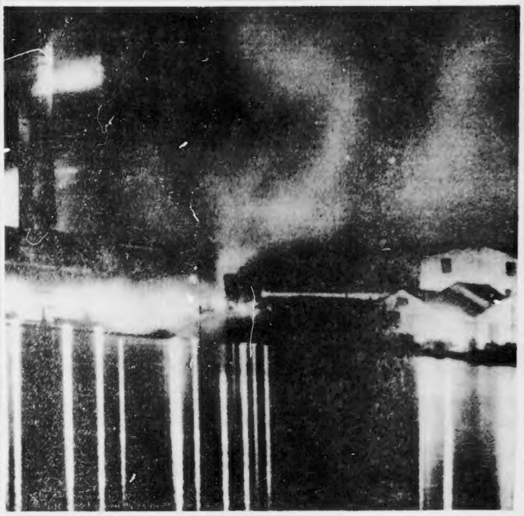
Navy Fire Probed

Ship Models Ruined

Mystery Blaze At Washington; Secrets Lost



International News Service Soundphoto

International News Soundphoto of spectacular fire which swept the experimental building at Washington navy yard, destroying many valuable ship models used in secret maneuvers. This, authorities said, will cause serious delay in navy experiments. An investigation is on today to determine whether the fire was of incendiary origin.

Washington, March 13 (UP)—An investigation was launched by naval and capital police today into a mysterious fire that destroyed an unestimated number of valuable ship models used in secret maneuvers at the Washington navy yard.

Authorities seeking the source of the blaze disclosed it will cause "serious delay" in navy experiments.

Among the missing models, Commander E. L. Woodside, chief planning officer said, was one sent to the yard by President Roosevelt to be overhauled. Searchers feared it either destroyed or badly damaged with the others.

Commanding officers said the fire apparently started in a pile of rags in the diving school, spreading to the 90-year-old building that houses the experimental basin nearby.

3-ALARM BLAZE

They added, however, that debris stored in the building was clean and that oily wipers were washed immediately after use to avoid spontaneous combustion.

Twenty pieces of fire apparatus streaked through the city at the theater hour after John Leonard, coxwain on the experimental ship Crilley, anchored off the yard, gave the first alarm.

Yard apparatus was unable to stop the spreading flames and three alarms were turned in to the city fire department within five minutes.

Flames sprang 70 feet high within a few minutes of the first alarm. Officials of a nearby children's institution held their charges in readiness for word from the police to move.

VALUE UNESTIMATED

Oxygen tanks are stored in the old frame building—known as No. 70—and firemen fought for an hour to keep the flames from these. In the south end of the building were the models.

Authorities said they were kept on shelves for use in working out naval maneuvers in the experimental basin. The shelves collapsed, taking with them the valuable little ships. Their monetary value, he said, could not be estimated.

Naval officers are trying to estimate the number of models lost and the complete extent of damage, as well as whether the fire was of incendiary origin. One model pulled intact from the debris was of a radio-controlled rowboat!

While the fire was in progress no one was allowed to enter or leave the yard through the military network that sprang up around its walls. It took more than an hour to subdue the flames.

NO OFFENSE TO U. S. INTENDED, NAZIS SAY

Berlin, March 13 (AP)—Foreign Minister Konstantin Von Neurath, sources close to the Wilhelmstrasse said today, has answered United States Ambassador William E. Dodd's representations against German press attacks with the explanation they were not intended to offend.

Von Neurath, they said, pointed out the strictures of Mayor La Guardia of New York against the German regime and said they created "understandable" indignation throughout the Reich.

If some German newspapers exceeded proper bounds in their comments, the foreign minister was said to have asserted, it was because of their excitement over the LaGuardia remarks.

Baron Von Neurath assured the United States ambassador no insult to the United States was intended, these circles said.

He also called attention, they said, to what he termed spiteful untruthful representations of German problems in sections of the American press.

The foreign office said no public announcement would be made here, however, of the conversations yesterday between Mr. Dodd and Von Neurath. Insofar as the German government is concerned, informed quarters said, the incident is closed.

The United States consulate meanwhile succeeded in delaying the ejection of Boris Smolar, Jewish telegraphic agency correspondent who had been given three days to leave the country, until March 18.

To Reopen Grave In Etta Riel Hunt

Worcester, March 13—Search for Etta Riel, 20-year-old Oxford girl whose disappearance in 1934 precipitated one of the greatest hunts for a missing person in the history of Massachusetts, will lead to the reopening of a grave in North cemetery, Oxford, early next week, it was learned today.

District Attorney Owen A. Hoban told the Boston Evening American that he had questioned several new witnesses and that he was in possession of new and valuable information.

It was understood that the reopening of the grave in North Cemetery might provide and answer to Etta Riel's strange disappearance and break the case wide open.

Two years ago this grave was brought to the attention of investigators but nothing was ever done about it.

THE HUMAN SIDE OF THE NEWS

Famous Filibusters -:- By Edwin C. Hill

Edwin C. Hill

From the talk going around in Washington, it appears likely that a filibuster may develop should the administration's Supreme Court bill get to the stage of a vote in the form in which it was introduced.

There happens to be a Senate rule which limits debate, but, to be invoked, this rule requires a two-thirds vote of the members present. Should the opponents of the Supreme Court bill decide to talk it to death, or should they feel themselves required to do so by the lack of a majority to defeat it, they are strong enough numerically to prevent the limitation of debate.

Filibusters have been known to the Senate for almost a century, or since Henry Clay's fiscal bills were buried under an avalanche of words in 1840. Less than two years ago, June 12-13, 1935, Senator Huey P. Long, of Louisiana, put on a one-man show, a continuous performance which lasted fifteen and one-half hours and which failed of its purpose, which was the defeat of the stop-gap NRA.

Why should such tactics be permitted? Such a question comes naturally, and quite as naturally comes the answer from Senator Borah, who says:

"Free debate has its evils, but controlled debate is intolerable. Controlled debate in both Houses would simply be a national disaster."

Borah, who never has filibustered in his 30 years in the Senate, made this comment immediately after Senator Long's filibuster when Senator Robinson suggested the outlawing of one-man filibusters.

GAG COURTS DISASTER

Borah is unquestionably right. Gag-rule in both Houses would be unbearable in that it would stifle completely the opposition party and work to the detriment of minorities which need protection most of all where they are overwhelmingly outnumbered in legislative bodies.

The House of Representatives limits its debate for the reason that if every one of 500 men could talk as long as he is pleased on any and all measures, the result would be chaos. Because of this restriction and because of the curtailment of the Speaker's powers, done in the days of Joe Cannon, the House in the public eye, does not loom as important as the Senate.

The last spectacular filibuster in the House occurred in 1911 and was brought about by an action of the Senate in eliminating a House clause from a claims bill. Speaker Cannon refused to adjourn the session and made his famous ruling, "Today is yesterday."

"The rules won't allow that it can't be done," screamed one of the Representatives.

"Now," said Cannon calmly, "that reminds me of a story. A fellow was put in jail for some minor offense and his lawyer, visiting him, said: 'By heavens, sir, they can't put you in jail for that!' And the prisoner replied just as excitedly: 'By heavens, sir, I'm in jail jus' the same!'"

All filibusters are not funny, but most of them are dramatic, save to the Senators who are compelled to lose their sleep and whose nerves get on edge because of this.

That of Senator Huey Long in June of 1935 was remarkable for the endurance and the facility of speech shown by the Senator from Louisiana. In his 15 hours and 30 minutes of talk he got very few [illegible], because, as determined as he was to talk the NRA stop-gap bill to death, a little group of Senators was just as determined that they would outlast him.

This was to be done by refusing adjournment of the session which Long pleaded for time and again. He didn't get it and when at end he ceased talking, a vote was had and the measure passed.

What do filibustering Senators talk about for hours at a time? The answer is, anything and everything.

Senator Long discoursed on the Bible, the Greek classics, his fight with Jim Farley, the methods of frying oysters and making pot-likker and the place in history of Frederick the Great. At one point he put this question to Vice-President Garner:

"Whatever became of the sword which Frederick the Great presented to George Washington?"

Despite the annoyance of filibustering and the ridiculous light in which it sometimes puts the Senate, the members of that body will think long and hard before ending the practice.

The Senator who is against today's filibuster may be the one who tomorrow wishes to talk a bill to death.

Most of them agree, too, with Borah's judgment that for every good bill killed by the rule of unlimited debate, a dozen bad laws are kept off the statute books.

The check or bond must not be included in the sealed envelope with the proposal but must be delivered to the Business Agent of the Department who will give a proper voucher for the deposit. Special attention of bidders is called to the minimum rates of wages prescribed by the State Department of Labor and Industries in accordance with the requirements of Chapter 461 of the Acts of 1935, to which the Contractor's attention is directed, and set forth in a schedule of minimum wages, copies of which may be obtained from the office of said Department. The name and address of the local registration office of the United States Reemployment Service, from which the employees under this project shall be obtained, as required in Paragraphs I and IV of the Special Contract Provisions, will be supplied later but will be in the general vicinity of the work. The right is reserved to reject any or all proposals or to accept the one deemed best. By: WILLIAM F. CALLAHAN, Commissioner of Public Works, Boston, Mass., March 12, 1937.

A HUNDRED TIMES your money back . . . if you have a vacant room

With all this talk of "Double your money back," here's how to make that vacant room bring back 25, 50 or even a hundred times your money. Figure it out for yourself. The small cost of an American-Advertiser Room-for-Rent Ad represents but a fraction of a room's rental over a period of weeks, months, years. A room, for example, bringing in as little as $4.00 or $5.00 per week in the course of a year will bring back 100 times a $3.92 expenditure for a Want Ad to fill that room. In fact, your investment for Want Ads is more than returned in the first few weeks your room is occupied. Concentrate your listings in the American-Advertiser and GET RESULTS.

"Thanks very much for renting my vacant room. I will always use American-Advertiser Want Ads in the future."

"I rented my room the very first afternoon my ad appeared in your paper."

"The first day my ad appeared in the American-Advertiser I secured a tenant. I recommend your columns wholeheartedly."

"I always get results from the American-Advertiser. Recently I rented a room the first day my ad appeared."

The Johnson Act In Jeopardy

THE TREASURY ruling against designation of French "defense loan" agents in America PARTIALLY blocks a brazen attempt to obtain new war loans in violation of the Johnson Act.

The prompt plugging of this loophole is commendable.

But American vigilance MUST NOT BE RELAXED.

Senator Johnson of California, author of the act, tells why:

"When we enacted this law, we contemplated a time in the future when these nations would come to us again for loans. THAT TIME IS HERE NOW. We have been stung once. We won't be stung again."

The Johnson Act, which forbids the lending of American money to nations in default on war debts, is protective of American interest.

IT MUST NOT BE UNDERMINED BY SUBTERFUGE.

THE French defense loan proposal involves the sale of bonds in France, but payable in American or English money.

Insofar as this plan MAY YET result in the investment of American money in France, circumvention of the purposes of the Johnson Act MAY STILL BE ACCOMPLISHED.

France, of course, is one of the major debt defaulters.

The only recourse America has against her is to say she cannot have new loans until she agrees to pay up old loans.

THAT IS WHAT THE JOHNSON ACT SAYS.

This is a sound position for the American Government to take.

THE Hearst newspapers have repeatedly warned that the stabilization program into which the Roosevelt Administration has entered with France and England is potentially an instrument for "getting around" the Johnson Act.

This warning becomes more pointed with the prospect that the stabilization program COULD BE ADJUSTED to permit exactly what the Johnson Act prohibits.

"It Is Life or Death"

UNITED STATES Senator Royal S. Copeland, Boston Chamber of Commerce guest speaker, struck at the heart of the American Merchant Marine troubles—LACK OF CO-OPERATION.

He blamed the shipping industry for failing to learn the lessons of mutual good will that brought prosperity to railroads and to railroad labor.

He chided the government for permitting foreign nations to take away business which rightfully belongs to American ship operators.

He pointed out that while commerce between our domestic ports is more than twice that of our foreign traffic, only one-third of it is carried in American vessels.

But Senator Copeland was not content to merely deplore a situation that has become almost a NATIONAL DISGRACE.

He wrote out a prescription and he told us to take it constantly, in liberal doses. He advised:

Let the new Maritime Commission, headed by the worthy Bostonian, Joseph P. Kennedy, be vested with COMPLETE responsibility for the welfare and development of shipping.

Let the Commission proceed to formulate DEFINITE policies.

Let the adjustment of ocean mail contracts be made as soon as possible.

Let the spirit of co-operation be SINCERE and NATIONWIDE.

Such a prescription cannot fail to work. And it MUST WORK, the sooner the better.

For, in Senator Copeland's own words, "We stand at the bedside; it is life or death for the American Merchant Marine."

Let Our Reply Be Strong

MASSACHUSETTS Congresswoman Edith Nourse Rogers vigorously protesting to Secretary of State Hull against Nazi press attacks on American women, has earned the praise of the entire nation.

All women feel that her resentment is THEIR resentment.

All men feel and know that the resentment is more properly THEIR resentment.

Chivalry is not dead in the United States; it is as alive today as when our ancestors crossed the Atlantic and carved a nation in the wilderness.

We are proud of our womanhood—our wives, our mothers and our sisters.

We will not have them insulted, abused and held up to the ridicule of the world by the Hitler newspapers.

American women, and Mrs. Rogers is an excellent example, have justified every confidence that we as a nation chose to place in them.

Our protest and our country's protest to the German government cannot be too strong.

An Antidote for Crime

JOSEPH H. HAGAN, Rhode Island Parole Division chief, believes in the old adage that "an ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

He wisely applies that philosophy to the nation's crime problem and tells us:

"We failed to make a DIRECT ATTACK."

But Rhode Island will fail no more, not if Chief Hagan has his way. He has a three-point program, not copyrighted, and free for all that want to try it.

Briefly, it is this:

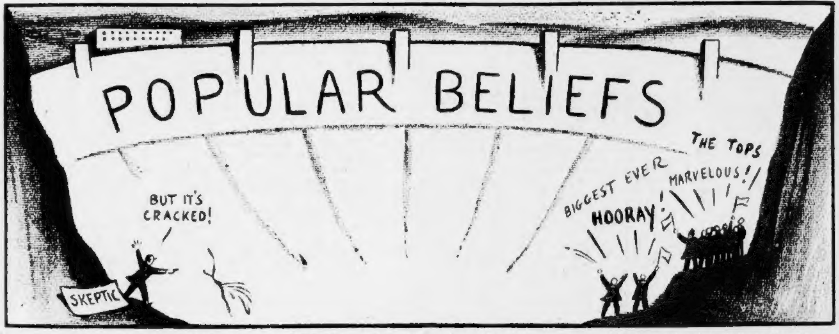
Make parents assume and fulfil their resonsibilities to children.

Encourage teachers to report delinquency as soon as it is observed.

Acknowledge the need and value of sound religious training.

The Rhode Island experiment will be well to watch and, perhaps, to imitate. For, as Mr. Hagan himself says, "while a strong start in life is not perfectly indicative of a fine finish, it is at least a worthwhile insurance."

But the Skeptic Found a Crack



PEOPLE BELIEVE that Bigness is Truth. Particularly do we Americans believe that if a thing is BIG, then it is RIGHT. But the skeptic is the man who finds THE CRACK IN "BIGNESS."

OFTEN, it is easier to make 10,000 people in a crowd believe what you say than it is to make ONE man, alone, believe you. The Crowd believes quickly, learns slowly, forgets overnight.

"What the wretched wish for intensely, that they freely BELIEVE"—Seneca wrote that centuries ago. It might have been written to describe the ease with which modern dictators persuade wretched, discouraged peoples to BELIEVE, WITHOUT THINKING.

When popular beliefs in what is wrong bind a people in the slavery of ignorance and fear, then is there need of a SKEPTIC, a man who has the courage to doubt.

Just what is this "skeptic," so that we may know him when we see him? Great skeptics have described themselves thus:

"A true skeptic is not one who merely doubts, but one who also EXAMINES"—Saint-Beuve.

"By doubting, we come at the TRUTH"—Cicero.

"William James used to preach 'the will to believe.' For my part, I should wish to preach 'the will to DOUBT' . . . What is wanted is not the will to believe but the will to FIND OUT THE TRUTH—which is the exact opposite of believing"—Bertrand Russell.

Now you know why we call the little fellow in the cartoon above a "skeptic"—he has found a crack in the new dam, which the crowds are wildly hailing as "The Tops!!!! STUPENDOUS!!!! Biggest in the World!!!! Colossally All-American!!!!" . . . all the bloated adjectives that a movie uses to advertise its next super feature.

The intelligent skeptic refuses to believe blindly what the rest of us, without thinking, accept as truth.

The professionally discontented complainer, who always yammers at everything, is a nuisance, to be avoided when possible.

But the intelligent skeptic, who applies knowledge to the examination of every belief which sweeps the rest of us along like sheep—such a man sows the seeds of Progress.

Columbus refused to believe that the earth was flat, that if you sailed West you would drop off the edge. He sailed West, discovered America.

All of us owe health, perhaps our lives, to the fact that men of science and medicine once refused to believe that diseases are spread by "devils" and "the evil eye." Intelligent men, skeptics, attacked the popular belief in "devils and evil spirits," they found germs at the root of disease, then found how to kill those germs.

But always, after a skeptic pushes the frontiers of knowledge further back, there comes lazy satisfaction—belief that THE BEST has at last been reached. Consider medicine, in which there has been so much progress. Charles F. Kettering, brilliant inventor, wrote:

"The doctors tell us there are certain diseases that are incurable. Do you know what an incurable disease is? It is one which THE DOCTORS KNOW NOTHING ABOUT. The disease has no objection to being cured at all."

The skeptic believes only this: Nothing is INCURABLE, "the best" can never be attained, and because a thing is the BIGGEST, does not mean that it is BEST.

The world needs skeptics—they keep us from getting fat and satisfied.

BOOK BREVITORIAL: In Discarding What Is "Old," Colleges Destroyed THINKING

ROBERT M. HUTCHINS and his wife, when he arrived in Chicago to become America's youngest college president—and one of the ablest.

"UNIVERSITIES take the sons of the rich and render them harmless to society . . . they take the sons of the pour and teach them to make money."

That is the serious charge of incompetence that Bob Hutchins makes against our American colleges in his book, "The Higher Learning in America."

Young Hutchins speaks with authority, and from experience. Educated at Yale, he became Dean of Yale's law school, youngest in history. Then he became president of the University of Chicago, youngest college president in America.

Bob Hutchins believes a college should be a "mental gymnasium," in which boys are taught to exercise their brains, LEARN TO THINK.

And as a good athletic coach does not try to teach boys a special sport until they have built up all their muscles, so Hutchins would not try to cram special knowledge into a boy's brain until that boy has learned FUNDAMENTAL knowledge.

But because we send our Willie to college today and demand that the college teach Willie how to make money, the colleges must try to cram "special" knowledge into brains that are too flabby to hold any knowledge.

And because we believe that "democracy" means that everybody must have the same education, the system of teaching must be adjusted DOWNWARD to fit the numbwits.

That same "democracy" in education permits every alumnus to speak his mind, what there is of it, about how a college should be run. Fortunately for education, college alumni generally confine their interest to hiring and firing football players and coaches.

But there is a still more serious product of the spirit of "democracy" in education—every college today permits students to pick any subjects they like. Professors and students hail this new freedom as dandy and democratic.

Mr. Hutchins thinks rightly that it is STUPID. Does a football coach let a freshman player decide what plays the team shall use?

A coach is supposed to know his business; so is a professor. And a professor's business is EDUCATION.

A professor should know what courses, what FUNDAMENTAL books will best build up the "muscles" of a boy's brains to enable that boy to tackle special knowledge later, and digest it properly. Once these fundamental courses are selected, every student should be MADE to take those courses.

Bob Hutchins charges: "I am willing to bet that in no school in this country today are six really great books read in their entirety." Hutchins would not lose his bet.

In our head-over-heels rush to be "modern" we have forgotten that fundamental knowledge, logic, truths have not changed since the days of the ancient Greek philosophers.

Two and two still make four. Fire still burns. Ambition is still ambition—men merely want different things. Hate is still hate—men merely hate different things. Fundamental truth does not change; it merely grows.

And to now the whole truth, we must study the ORIGIN OF TRUTH.

Six courses every college should teach, says Bob Hutchins:

FIRST, most important, one course must teach the CLASSICS—those books which contain the thoughts of the greatest thinkers throughout the ages, books that are always "modern" because they contain TRUTH. We must know old truths to properly examine new truths and discard falsehoods.

SECOND: There must be a course in "how to READ and RETAIN what we read."

THIRD: There must be a course in writing, which follows classical outlines as a basis of style. Clear writing is a test of clear thinking.

FOURTH: There must be a course in rhetoric, the art of speaking. America has lost this art—save in Congress, and there they have lost the art of thinking.

FIFTH: There must be a course in logic, the science of THINKING, upon which all other sciences are based.

SIXTH: There must be a course in mathematics—that is the gymnasium in which you exercise your powers of logic, build up your power to THINK.

That is the system of education that Bob Hutchins believes would lay the proper foundations upon which a man could build real knowledge.

Unfortunately, all Mr. Hutchins needs to put his ideas into effect is about forty million dollars to buy a college. Most of the people who have forty million dollars do not have the "fundamental education" that Hutchins believes we need.

And since most of us Americans would rather have forty million dollars than "fundamental knowledge," Mr. Hutchins will not get his college soon.

Listen, World! -:- -:- By Elsie Robinson

If I see another picture of a child-wife or mother I'm going right out into the middle of the street and throw 9735 bright purple fits.

No, you needn't blame the newspapers. If America has become this kind of a place the voters might as well hear about it—and they certainly are. Ever since diminutive Eunice Winstead started things off by becoming a dowager at 9 we've had daily exhibits of Missuses and Mamas, most of 'em barely housebroken and still possessing their baby teeth.

This time it's little Mary Keller of Bessemere, Alabama, aged 13, proudly displaying her second son, the first having been born when she was 11.

After which, we might momentarily expect mass matrimony from the Dionnes, in case they happened to be Americans—which they'd better thank their lucky stars they aren't.

A NATIONAL DISGRACE

Now I am an American. Hitherto I have been fairly proud of that fact. But since we've been exposing all these pin-feather matrons, I've wished ardently that I'd been born an Hairy Ainu or an Australian Aborigine, or even a plain mongrel idiot. For, obviously, one doesn't expect much social consciousness from such knickknacks.

But when a supposedly civilized nation which, by its own admission, leads all other countries in intelligence, morality and general culture, starts acting up as we're doing, I, for one, would like to know how to avoid a lot of highly humiliating questions—or am even willing to swap my citizenship, if it can be so arranged, for a good, used fireless cooker or a painless lawn mower.

Am I funning? I am not! I am shocked, sickened, shamed and furious. But they won't print the words I'd really like to say, so I've got to get around it this way. But the more I think about the whole affair, the madder I get. For the reason underlying child marriage is, if possible, even more outrageous than the marriages themselves.

Briefly—in many of our states parents are held to have practically unlimited and divine authority over their children. Wherefore little girls, hardly out of their own cradles, may marry and bear children, against every aspect of physical and spiritual decency, if either or both parents permit.

On the same theory, a child may be deprived of education and forced into labor bondage which is worse than slavery.

The consenting parent may be as ignorant as can be, greedy and brutal . . . incompetent to pass upon any subject requiring mature judgement. Nor would his or her opinion be considered for a second in any other matter. But where the child is considered, they are held infallible and their agreement legalizes and sanctifies arrangements which would shame a self-respecting weasel.

UNFIT FOR JOB

I am neither priest nor statesman—and I do not set up to interpret any law, either sacred or secular. But as a decent human being and a loyal, if somewhat embarrassed, citizen, it seems to me that we are faced with a most discreditable situation.

Theoretically, the sanctity of parents listens lovely. Practically, a parent is as sacred as it acts and no more so. And the same ruling applies to our hotly contested "states' rights."

And if legally okaying such unions is all some states know about the majesty of America, they, too, could stand considerable wising up.

Bible Text: "Better is the poor that walketh in His integrity than he that is perverse in his works."—Proverbs 19:1. Suggested by the Rev. E. C. Whiting, Congregational minister, Boston.

That's That -:- By Bruce Gustin

The "balloon barrage" planned by Great Britain to defend London against air attacks sounds fantastic. But military experts are confident it will work. It will take an actual test to prove its efficacy. The barrage consists of a huge fleet of kite balloons supporting steel cables from which hang a screen of wires. In the event of an air attack, the balloons would be sent up, lifting a wire fence around the city to keep hostile planes out. If you want a mathematical workout, try to calculate the size of the fence which will be required to cage in London so an enemy plane cannot get over the city.

In the war business there is a never ending race between offense and defense. No sooner is a new weapon of attack devised than armament makers and military and naval experts and scientists start figuring out a defense against it. Their most puzzling problem for several years has been that of protecting large cities against aerial attack.

The cost of wage increases granted steel employes is being passed along to the consumer in the form of higher steel prices. That is what usually happens. People generally do not object to paying higher prices to enable employers to pay higher wages. But they like to be certain the price increase is not greater than the wage increase.

Senator Robinson, Democratic leader, says there is a strong likelihood that in the next year "something substantial may be accomplished looking toward a final settlement of the war debts." Senator Borah probably has the right hunch in suspecting that a REDUCTION of the debts will be involved in any proposal that is made for a settlement.

France and Great Britain, two of our principal defaulting debtors, are getting their houses in readiness for another European war. Huge expenditures for armaments are merely a part of their preparations. Equally important to them is restoration of their credit in the United States. They want to fix things so they can make us pay for their next war just as they tricked us into paying for the World War. Surely we can't be boobs enough to let them skin us again.

There is only one debt settlement proposal to which the United States should listen. That is cash on the line.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McIntyre

New York, March 13—All my remembering years I have been a push-over for a clear, cold winter night. Night with the glitter of mirror and scattery stars atwinkle in a heaven of frost blue. No sound like the zip of the crunch of snow or the ringing sharp jingle of sleigh bells.

Others may sing of the almond blossom and the cherry sprays, but my vote goes to a stark, lonely tree silhoueted on a snow-flung hill, bathed in the glow of a distant moon. I was thinking tonight of our hemmed-in winter on a Missouri farm before I went to Ohio to live with Grandma McIntyre.

The Stork Club's glittering dazzle never had the lustre and cheer of that flare from the back-log in the family sitting room with the cat asleep on the carpet footstool and old dog Clay, the red setter, stetched out pleasantly atwitch with dreams of the chase. A hamper of Sheepnose apples handy.

Grandma Young on one side of the parlor lamp, invariably smudged black one chimney side, knitting. Grandpa on the other reading the Farmer's Almanac as the day grayed and chickens took to roost. At 8 o'clock prayers, warming of flannels and up the creak stairs to dreamless sleep.

Shortly before her recent passing, my sister in Kansas City resurrected out of an old humped back horsehair trunk salvaged from the Missouri attic our old-fashioned coffee mill—the sort put between the knees and vigorously turned. The little drawer where the grounds fell was still aromatic of coffee.

I've heard coffee had the most clinging of all odors and this rather proves it. The mill had not been used for 25 years. The tang from the kitchen as the breakfast coffee was being ground was a scent from Araby. A beglamouring benison of a crisp winter morn.

To the kitchen Jed, the hired man, his sweat-stained hat abaft, ungloved hands the wimpled raw red of the rooster comb, came plunging with his load of freshly chopped wood. The gleam and zing of a bright axe biting into wood is always provocative somehow and I don't know why. It has caught poetical fancy down the ages. Jed's great coat and muffler were powdered with snow and his stubby mustaches rimed with frost.

In later years one of the rustic characters in "Way Down East," Hi Holler, was so much like Jed I sought him out in his dressing room in Dayton, O. But it was only footlight illusion. He was a Brooklyn boy, smoked Turkish Trophies and was up-to-date.

The highlights of our Missouri winters were the "sociables" at the clapboard meeting house and the twice a year arrival of Mr. Solomon, the Polish pack peddler. Mr. Solomon had a straggly coil of beard, deep-set fever-bright eyes, a ringer for Warfield in "The Auctioneer." He was, to us, the acme of worldliness, traveling from Lincoln, Neb. to St. Joe, hawking tinware, machine oil, dishes, needles and thread, etc. All carried on his stooped shoulders.

He always remained for dinner and all night. A shrinking little man with the remote and nervous smile of a sun-lit ripple. The kindly, wandering Jew whom life had borne down to a gentle bleakness.

There was the night of the Big Blizzard standing out vividly to this moment. It came up after a still ominous grey of glowering skies. The live stock fidgeted. Grandpa built up a roaring fire and was reading to us from Hawthorne's "The House of Seven Gables" when came a calm, the wind suddenly rose and through the windows we could see the sturdy oaks and mighty maples in topsy-turvey strain. Jed started for well water but turned back. "Ain't fittin' for man or beast," he grumbled. There was eerie whistling in the chimney.

As Poe once wrote: Windows tugged at hasps and doors chittered. Terrorized birds wheeled and flung frail chirps against the boom. We heard a thud and the cow shed flattened out like a pan cake, filling the air with startled moanings. Old Clay's rufous fur rose as he circled stiff legged with throaty growls.

Sister and I were in the delicious ecstasy of fear and thrill. The end of the world perhaps!

The old four-poster with its mountainous pile of feathers was especial joy that blizzardy night. Now and then I could hear grandpa clumping up and down the stairs and grandma calling, "Pa, don't you go out!"

So morning came with the sun in a burst of gorgeous splendor, a gauzy spread of violet, orange and pink. The air clean, cold, brittle. Our farm land was a freshly swept world in glittering enchantment. They brought in Aunt Dora's pet lamb, half frozen, from the south meadow, but wrapped in blankets and put behind the kitchen stove it was soon itself again.

Mr. Dockerty, the mail man, was unable to reach us for two days and the newspaper called it the worst storm of the century. Anyway, it was an interlude in rural monotony and we had something to talk about until the robins came again.
